

~~YORK UNIVERSITY LAW LIBRARY~~

LAW LIBRARY

CIVIL PROCEDURE

AMONG

THE ROMANS.

Cambridge :

PRINTED BY C. J. CLAY, M.A.
AT THE UNIVERSITY PRESS,

FOR MACMILLAN AND Co.

LONDON: WILDY AND SONS.

OXFORD: J. H. AND JAMES PARKER.

EDINBURGH: EDMONSTON AND DOUGLAS.

DUBLIN: WILLIAM ROBERTSON.

GLASGOW: JAMES MACLEHOSE.

A HISTORICAL SKETCH OF
CIVIL PROCEDURE
AMONG THE ROMANS.

BY J. T. ABDY, LL.D.

BARRISTER AT LAW, REGIUS PROFESSOR OF CIVIL LAW IN THE UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE, AND FORMERLY FELLOW OF TRINITY HALL.

Cambridge :
MACMILLAN AND CO.
1857.

Presented to the LIBRARY of the UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO

by

YORK UNIVERSITY LAW LIBRARY

TO HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS
PRINCE ALBERT,
CHANCELLOR OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE.
 &c. &c.

This Work is
(BY PERMISSION) DEDICATED BY HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS'S MOST OBEDIENT HUMBLE SERVANT,
THE AUTHOR.

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2009 with funding from Ontario Council of University Libraries

P R E F A C E.

A CONSIDERABLE portion of the matter contained in these pages was delivered in the shape of Lectures, at the University of Cambridge, on the Rise and Progress of Civil Procedure among the Romans.

My original aim was to dwell upon the historical features in this branch of their legal institutions, and to exhibit its steady progress from the ancient rude symbolism of the Twelve Tables, to the more complex technicality of the Imperial Code, rather than to attempt to make a treatise on actions at law.

But as I advanced in my task I found many points requiring special notice ; and though the labours of Heffter, Savigny, Zimmern, Walther, and Ortolan had cleared away the difficulties, and left little or nothing that was new, for a writer on this part of Roman law to speak of, yet the inaccessibility to many persons of their works, and the quantity of matter contained therein, induced me to seize upon a few salient points, and exhibit them in an English dress.

Of these topics the most noteworthy to my mind were the separation of the legislative and judicial functions of the chief magistrates at Rome, the peculiar position of the Judex, the influence of equitable remedies on the Jus civile, the history of Interdicts, and the change in the character of Appeals, and mode of bringing them; most noteworthy because they belong really to the history of the Roman people, and emphatically mark those elements of their character so strenuously insisted on, and so eloquently described by Savigny, viz. the holding fast by the long-established without allowing themselves to be fettered by it; and the quick, lively, political spirit by which the power of their constitution was renovated, so that what was new merely ministered to the development of what was old.

The chapter on Evidence was added in order to bring together from the pages of Gothofred, Pothier, and Huber some few of the leading principles on which this part of the Roman law of procedure was based, that by this means might be exhibited, not only the contrast between the system of that people and our own, but the peculiar advantages which Roman jurisprudence, by reason of its high state of cultivation, affords of serving as a pattern and model for all scientific labours in law.

Perhaps no period of time could be found better adapted than the present for dwelling upon the doctrines of the Roman law, and insisting on its merits in aid of the development of legal principles. The extensive alterations in our process and forms of pleading, the gradual rapprochement of equity to common law, the steady progress that is going on in the removal of those feudal notions that have hampered our law of real property, and overlaid it with technical difficulties, expressed in a jargon as barbarous as it is unphilosophical, are some among other beneficial changes by which we may hope in time to approximate to that point of excellence ascribed by Savigny to the Roman law, when we shall have a system that may be discovered by plain good sense, not overlaid with intolerable formalities and narrow pedantry on the one hand, nor too abstruse and complicated for the apprehension of all but a few on the other; a system not purposely confined to a few high priests and patricians, like the Actiones legis of old, but one approved and appreciated by all, on account of its simplicity and clearness, where the "theory and practice may be the same, the one framed for immediate application, the other ennobled by scientific treatment, and where we shall see in every principle a case for application, in every case a rule by which to decide it."

The remarks of an elegant scholar of our own time (whose writings prove his eminent qualities as a jurist) come in aid of the views here maintained, that the Roman law deserves especial attention and deep study in the present day. "It is not," says Dr. Maine, in his masterly essay on Roman law and legal education¹, "because our jurisprudence and that of Rome were once alike that they ought to be studied together, it is because they will be alike, it is because we in England are slowly and perhaps unconsciously and unwillingly, but still steadily and certainly, accustoming ourselves to the same modes of legal thought, and to the same conceptions of legal principle to which the Roman jurists had attained after centuries of accumulated experience and unwearied cultivation."

These are admirable words, the truth and value of which become the clearer the closer we scrutinise the tendency of our modern legal reform; but to two, among the many questions of the day, does the importance of the study of the Roman law most apply, viz. the demand for codification, and the demand for legal education. The difficulties that stand in the way of the first of these questions are many and powerful, not the least of which is what the writer above quoted so forcibly insists upon, viz. the decay of technical phraseology in the English law, and the want of a proper legal terminology, by which a definite and concise expression of legal conceptions may be given; an evil that presented itself as one of such importance to the mind of Mr. Livingstone, as required at once to be removed, and necessitated the addition to his Code of Louisiana of a book of definitions.

¹ See the Cambridge Essays for 1856.

How admirably the Roman Law comes in aid of this defect, and what service may be rendered to our legal phraseology by the writers whose technical language is so skilfully exhibited in the pages of the Digest, Dr. Maine has sufficiently shewn. But it is in its connexion with legal education that the Roman Law stands preeminently forth. If we are to expect a properly devised system of codified, or well arranged law, is it too much to ask for minds trained up to the task, and capable of providing for the combination of theory and practice, that must present itself therein? And if what Bacon says be true, that the age in which a code should be formed should exceed preceding ages in intelligence, what answer shall be made to the question, "Is this such an age, and have we the means at our disposal for such a task?" Can we say that our general mass of legal intelligence is superior to what is past, or can we avoid seeing the inferiority of our own juridical writers to the jurists of neighbouring countries. And when we search for reasons for such a state of affairs, one above all must strike us, viz. the want of a sound legal training for those who are to become the proposers and exponents of the laws of this country.

For one thing and the other, for legal reform, whatever shape it may assume, and for legal education, the maxims and principles embodied in the Roman Law, and the language in which they are framed, undoubtedly are of inestimable value.

The study of the Roman Law will help to bring out that twofold spirit, which, to use Savigny's words, is indispensable to the jurist—the historical, by which the peculiarities of every age and every form of law may be seized and appreciated, the systematic, by which every notion and every rule may be placed in lively connexion and cooperation with the whole.

In conclusion, let us hope that the time is not only coming, but is not far off, when the phraseology of the Statute-Book will not be the worse for a rate in aid from its friendly, not rival neighbour, the Corpus Juris, and the champions of Archbold, Tidd and Chitty will have no cause to fear the utter destruction of these eloquent commentators, although our students are brought up to peruse and admire the learning of Ulpian, Gaius and Papinian.

CAMBRIDGE,
June 18, 1857.

CONTENTS.

CHAPTER I.

	PAGE
Law of Civil Procedure among the Romans	I

CHAPTER II.

On the Office of the Roman Magistrate and Judge, at various times	37
--	----

CHAPTER III.

Of the Inferior Judges	62
----------------------------------	----

CHAPTER IV.

The various divisions of the Actio	71
--	----

CHAPTER V.

A Sketch of Roman Proceedings at Law	84
--	----

CHAPTER VI.

The Alterations introduced by the Emperors	96
--	----

CHAPTER VII.

Roman Law of Evidence	107
---------------------------------	-----

CHAPTER VIII.

The Power of Appeal	134
-------------------------------	-----

EXPLANATION OF REFERENCES.

I. and Inst. stands for the Institutes of Justinian.

D. for Digest.

C. for Justinian's Code.

N. for the Novellæ Constitutiones.

Cod. Theod. for the Codex Theodosianus.

LAW OF CIVIL PROCEDURE AMONG THE ROMANS.

CHAPTER I.

IN every civilised country we find the most careful attention paid to that branch of their laws, whether codified or not, that relates to what is called Procedure. I propose in the following pages to investigate the principles on which the Roman Law of Actions was founded, and in tracing the changes that from time to time took place in them, to shew how immediately they were influenced by the alterations of manners, thoughts and habits among the people themselves. It will however, in my opinion, be useful briefly to explain the notion involved in that which is called Civil Procedure, or Action at Law, and to commence with laying down certain positions as starting points.

The general nature of an action at Law.

First of all, then, it must be understood that "a right," or "Jus," taken subjectively, is the claim made by an individual, and recognised by the State to some fixed and certain object, by virtue of which claim such object is submitted to the juridical decision of another; hence three conditions are necessary in every such claim, in order to complete it as a Right:—

- 1st. A subject capable of exercising the right.
- 2nd. An object to which the right is attached; and
- 3rd. A determined fact, with which the acquisition of the right is connected, in accordance with juridical principles; that is its foundation, or that which calls it into existence and sustains it afterwards.

2ndly. The most simple and convenient aspect, in which rights may be regarded, is twofold;—one relating to their extent, the other to their object. Under the first head, although in reality they have a general and universal interest, yet have they also an individual one, attaching to their possession; and therefore they are either absolute and generally obligatory, or relative and personal. Under the second head, we consider their foundation and their aim, that is, not only as connected with individuals, but as concerned with things and actions; in the one case we call them Jura in Re, or property rights; in the other, Jura ad Rem, or obligation rights. And this division we find expressed by the Roman lawyers in these words, “Omne jus quo utimur, vel ad personas pertinet, vel ad res, vel ad actiones.” Inst. i. 2. 12.

Gaii, i. § 8.

3rdly. As a result of such a notion of a right it may safely be laid down, that the possessor of it is entitled to exercise it, and in so doing, as long as he confines himself to its limits, he cannot be acting wrongfully or unjustly; that no one can be allowed to interfere with his enjoyment, and that if any interference takes place it is the business of the State to come to the assistance of him who is thus injured: but that it is the business of every good citizen of a well ordered State not to take the law into his own hand, but to appeal to the judicial authority for aid.

Here then we find ourselves touching at once on the demesne of remedies. Our first questions naturally are, To whom ought we to apply for aid? in what form ought we to demand that aid? and how will he to whom we have to apply proceed in the settlement of our fair claim, and in the repression of our adversary's unjust claim? These are really all the points for investigation in that which is called Civil Procedure; and therefore it is that Action has been defined by the Roman lawyers to be "nihil aliud quam Jus¹ persequendi judicio² quod sibi debetur³," by the English lawyer, "action n'est autre chose que loyal demande de son droit."

Inst. IV.1.1.

Co. Litt.
285.(a)

We mean by Right of Action then, first the right, which he, who is injured in any way by another, has to claim redress; further we understand by the word Action itself, not only the exercise of such a right, but technically the written act or process, as we term it, which opens the judicial discussion. At present I propose to consider first, the right of action among the Romans historically, and then to advance to some of the technicalities involved in their law of actions. Under the first head I shall distinguish the periods of change in the history of actions into three epochs.

¹ Right of remedy.

² The authority and place where.

³ The object aimed at by the plaintiff.

The first and rudest of these is exhibited under the class of what were termed Legis Actiones, (an expression that marks more especially their form); and these remedies of injury and violence consisted of symbolical acts, accompanied by certain verbal forms, always strictly adhered to.

The second epoch was marked by the destruction of these Legis Actiones, and the substitution of the Formulæ, as the basis of all procedure; a change distinctly explained by Gaius in these words, “Per legem iv. § 30. Æbutiam, et duas Julias sublatae sunt istae legis actiones, effectumque est ut per concepta verba, id est per formulas, litigaremus." From which we may gather, that the symbols and pantomime of the old Legis Actiones were removed, and that the matter in dispute was laid before the Prætor or Judex, in the shape of written pleadings, or "concepta verba, vel formulas."

Third Epoch.
Judicia Extraordi-naria.
A.D. 282.

This second stage or formulary process lasted till the reign of Diocletian, in whose time, or perhaps a little later, the custom of nominating a Judex was exchanged for that of referring the matter to a Magistratus, and the Ordo Judiciorum Privatorum was merged in the Judicia Extraordinaria; one consequence of which was a departure from the strict formulary process and technical pleadings, and an introduction of equitable interpretations.

C. 2. 58.

But such important changes as these require a few words of explanation; and I propose now to dwell briefly on each of these epochs, and shew how each was adapted to the spirit of the particular period in which it flourished, and how each alteration was produced by uncontrollable circumstances.

The era in which the first of these judicial remedies grew into repute, was that portion of time that extended from the earliest attempt at codifying or systematising the laws of Rome, to the establishment of the Prætorship, i.e. from the time of the Twelve Tables to the year A.U.C. 387, a period full of eventful years for Rome, marked by bloody foreign wars and furious internal strife, but at the same time a period especially stamped with the most peculiar traits of Roman character. Of those characteristics their Jurisprudence had its full share. Without treatises, without art, without lawyers, like that of every country in its infancy, its forms and ceremonies were of the rudest, but at the same time, of the most expressive nature; yet it differed from that of other countries, in that it maintained its exclusive character, in spite of the difficulties it encountered, and in spite of temptations to amalgamate with other systems. It differed also materially from that of other nations and people, in the ease with characteristics in the first period.

Roman

which it adjusted itself to the internal changes that were constantly at work in Rome. It has been well said by an acute and powerful writer on Roman Law, that Rome's greatness was owing to the quick, lively political spirit by which she so renovated the power of her constitution, that the new merely administered to the development of the old. It was by a judicious mixture of the permanent, or conservative, and progressive reformatory spirit, that she was enabled to shape a constitution and frame laws that in time gave her the empire of the world. In the Law we find the Roman character strongly impressed. The history of that law exhibits everywhere a gradual, wholly organic development, a holding fast by long established principles and notions without being fettered by them—a happy power of seizing on a new and popular theory, and by adapting it to the old, of framing a fresh form, which thus became as matured and fixed as though it were old law.

Savigny—
Vocation of our Age for Jurisprudence.

Even in the rude period, when these Actiones Legis flourished, is this systematic development visible. Even before the great era of Cicero there were men who played their parts in the quiet reform and improvement of their jurisprudence as honestly, if not so skilfully, as Papinian and Ulpian in the golden days of the Roman Law.

I have said that each change and each epoch was characterised by peculiar features; I may add, that in every division of their jurisprudence, an analogy was preserved, and that through them all a unity of purpose and design is visible.

Thus the remarkable pre-eminence of the citizenship affects every branch of the laws, while the simplicity of juridical notions is evinced in the rude symbolical acts by which all judicial proceedings were marked, and which were tenaciously adhered to for a length of time, on account of the advantages derived from their palpableness. A brief glance at two of their early legal institutions will shew clearly these features—the spirit of exclusiveness and the love of publicity. In the one, that of property,

Characteristic traits of the Roman Law.

Of Property.

without a knowledge of the mysterious privileges of citizenship we should have no right understanding of the different species of ownership, such as the Mancipium, and the possession Ex jure Quiritium, or whence arose the necessity for the introduction of a third form, the Bonitarian. Nor would it be easy to account for or explain the various modes by which property was transferred from one to another, such, for instance, as Mancipatio, and In jure cessio, if we had not seen, in the explanation of the ceremony given by Gaius, the remarkable publicity which it was required should accompany the transfer of property.

Of Contracts.

In the other legal institution, that of Obligations or Contracts, the strict observance of this publicity is equally visible, and under the name of Nexum, which was the earliest technical term for contract, a complete analogy was preserved between obligations and sales or conveyances, for no obligation was ratified by mere word of mouth, by consent, or bare delivery; in every case the fiction of a public sale was resorted to, and the presence of witnesses¹ was necessary.

If then such were the characteristic features stamped upon other institutions, it was not likely that Civil Procedure or "Remedy by Action" would be placed on a different footing; accordingly we find, that in the era of the Legis Actiones the three distinguishing marks were exclusiveness, publicity, and simplicity.

Of these Legis Actiones Gaius enumerates and explains five². Without entering into

Of Civil Procedure.

The Legis Actiones enumerated.
Comm. IV.

¹ Roman citizens.

² 1. The Sacramenti Actio, a genus of actions rather than a particular specific one, extending to every kind of business, even to those for which the law had given no other action. Here each party (plaintiff and defendant) deposited with the Pontifex a sum of money (Sacramentum) to abide the issue of the suit before the Centumviri or Judex, the sum so deposited by the loser was forfeited to the Treasury (pœnæ nomine). In the Orat. pro Cæcina, c. 33, and in the Pro Dom. 29, Cicero alludes to the formula appended to this Actio "Justum sit sacramentum an injustum."

2. Judicis Postulatio—of which we have no clear account, probably it was applicable to but a few cases, or used, as Zimmern suggests, to assess damages by means of a Judex.

3. Per Conditionem—where the plaintiff summoned his adversary to be present in order to choose a Judex on the 30th day (condicere was the old word for denuntiare).

4. Per Manus Injectionem—this, from Gaius's account, seems to have been rather a legal remedy for recovering on a judgment any detailed exposition of them, one or two of the leading political advantages of these forms may be pointed out.

Whatever might have been the authority belonging to the kings before the republican times, in deciding on suits brought before them, whether there was any separation made in their judicial and legislative functions, or whether, as Cicero says, "Jus privati petere solebant a regibus," and, as Dionysius asserts, not till Servius's reign was the office of Judex introduced; yet, in the days of the Republic, the offices of Magistrate and Judge were entirely distinct, and the Magistrate's duty consisted in granting a formula or process, and in appointing the Judex, or rather in sanc-

De Rep. v.
2.

Dion. Hal.
iv. 25.

Distinction between Magistrate and Judex.

than an original action, deriving its name from the words in the formula that accompanied it, "ob eam rem ego tibi judicati manus injicio."

5. Per Pignoris Capionem. This was a form partly customary and partly legal, differing in some important particulars from the other Actiones, such as being conducted, not "in jure," in the absence of the defendant if necessary, on any day whether fastus or nefastus, and in exacting a pledge from the opponent. On this subject see the notes in the Appendix to Linley's Study of Jurisprudence (pp. 32—35), a work which for clearness of explanation and precision cannot be too much praised; see also Gaii Comm. iv. 13—39.

tioning the choice of Judex, made by the contending parties. Each of these proceedings had a technical name; that before the magistrate was said to be done *In jure*¹, that before the Judex was called a Judicium. The power of the Judex when so appointed was² entirely independent of the magistrate, though his position was rather that of an arbiter than a public officer³.

Between In Jure and In Judicio.

From the decision of the Judex there was no appeal, nor indeed did any such measure exist among the Romans. For the Veto, which has sometimes been confounded with Appeal, was of a nature entirely distinct, the effect of which was to annul and put a stop to all legal proceedings, not to remit them to another hearing.

Walther.
Preface,
xix.

It was only in a Republic, and among a people so exclusive as the Roman, that such Position and authority of the Judex.

¹ Cf. the passage in the Oration Pro Publico Quintio, c. 9: "Te Judicem C. Aquilli sumsit Judicium esse non de re pecuniaria" &c.

² Provided however that the formula was strictly observed.

³ A remarkable fact should be noticed here, that where the Quiritarian ownership was in dispute, the matter was heard, not before a Judex, but before the tribunal of Centumvirs, who were nominated by the Tribes (an instance of the exclusive Roman spirit).

an anomaly would exist; an anomaly that may be cleared up, by remembering, that as each magistrate received his authority from and was an immediate delegate of the sovereign people, by virtue of that sovereign delegation he reigned supreme in his office, and was at once invested with a thoroughly independent power of action. Hence we have a clue to the apparent harshness with which a Judex was punished for negligence or *imperitia*¹, when, as was said, "litem suam fecit," because as there was no appeal from his sentence, it was necessary to protect the parties whose cause he decided, while, at the same time, to afford him due protection, skilled assessors, *jureconsults*², were permitted to sit by and direct him in points of difficulty.

Advantages of the office of Judex.

Autocratic as this office was, and to our ideas dangerous as it may seem, it was so congenial to Roman notions¹ that it lasted for many years; the question then naturally arises, what were the advantages conferred by this institution?—they may be summed up very briefly under the double bearing, political and practical. Politically,^{1s, Political.} it offered the advantages of simplicity and economy, good and prompt administration of justice, all opportunity removed from the magistrate of abusing his authority over individuals, by delegating part of his duties to another, while that other was purposely placed in an independent post, and raised above those influences that too often act injuriously upon nominees of government. For he was the representative of the people, and as such was chosen, not because he was a skilful lawyer, not because he was a patrician, not because he was a partisan, but because he was an honest man, and a man of business habits, one too, who might himself the very next day be in the position of one or other of the parties whose cause he was deciding. Nor was he placed in any technical difficulty in the discharge of his functions. The formula, which accompanied his appointment gave him full instructions, because it comprised a series of questions in which the whole matter in dispute had previously been arranged before the magistrate, and to which he was to answer yes or no. His decision or judgment could not go further than the imposing a pecuniary penalty, whatever might be the subject of demand; the execution of this judgment belonged to the magistrate.

¹ For such imperitia, he against whom the Judex improperly decided, had an "actio in factum," and the damages were left to the discretion of the person trying it. But if the Judex was guilty of dolus in his false judgment, then, in addition to damages, he suffered by a mark of disgrace. Cicero de Oratore, II. 75. "Quid? si, quum pro altero dicas, litem tuam facias."

² Thus in Quintius's suit three juris consulti sat as assessors—M. Marcellus, P. Quintilius, and L. Lucullus.

¹ And so much was it bound up with the Roman constitution as to be looked upon as an emblem of liberty, whose loss Cicero touchingly regrets in the De Officiis, “Extincto enim Senatu, deletisque Judiciis quid est, quod dignum nobis aut in curia aut in foro agere possimus?”

2nd, Practical.

In a practical light this office offered equal advantages. In the first place it gave the Magistrate liberty to attend to the higher parts of his duty, the legislative functions, by disembarassing him of that infinity of questions of detail which, by occupying time, would divert his attention from the higher business of the commonwealth; and secondly, it ensured a safe rapidity in the despatch of business, because two courts were sitting at the same time; in one the questions of fact, the yes and the no, were being sifted; in the other, the legal difficulties, that are ever a fruitful source of delay, were heard and decided.

I have dwelt thus at length on this separation of law and fact, this double court of Magistrate and Judex, on account of its being a clue to the history of the early Roman Procedure, as well as characteristic of the Formulary Process, or second æra, and of the Legis Actiones, or first, but above all, because it illustrates what I laid down before, as an important feature of the historical development of the Roman Law, that it is specially stamped with Roman notions, for it was a cherished principle with them, that none but a private citizen, chosen by themselves, should decide on the disputes of fellow-citizens.

It is fitting now that I make a few remarks on the Legis Actiones; I say few, because the forms of proceeding themselves are so ably explained in Mr. Linley's work that I need not waste time by dwelling on that portion of my subject.

This double court characteristic of the two æras of action.

The Legis Actiones.

The term
'legis ac-tio.'

The term "legis actio" was a generic one, designating all the formalities of process then employed, but each of those formalities had a special name, drawn from the peculiar act that characterises it.

Vocatio in Jus.

In these early days all process commenced with the *Vocatio in Jus*¹, or the summons, by which the plaintiff cited his adversary before the magistrate's tribunal, on whose refusal to appear the plaintiff was allowed, in the presence of proper witnesses, to seize and conduct him forcibly "in Jus"—a proceeding in strict accordance with the 1st of the XII. Tables: "Si in Jus vocat, ni it, antestator, igitur em capito." The defendant could avoid this compulsory sum-

Tab. i. 4.

¹ It is scarcely necessary here to quote the well-known scene so graphically described by Horace, Serm. i. Sat. 9, v. 74, with the "Licet antestari," and the Plaintiff and the Defendant's rapid exit "in Jus" amid the cries of the crowd.

Plautus, in the Curcul. v. sc. 2, gives the formulæ both of the Vocatio and the Antestatio.

That women could be baled into court "in Jus," in the Decemviral times, is clear from Livy's narrative of Virginia, III. 44.

mons, by offering a vindex to represent him, who took on himself the process. But defendant could be seized and haled into court from his own house; for it was a maxim of Law, “Domus tutissimum cuique refugium atque receptaculum.” D. 2. 4. 18.
D. 50, 17.
103.

In after times the Prætorian jurisdiction introduced some important and salutary alterations in the roughness of these proceedings, protecting, by the penal action “de vi non eximendo,” defendants from unnecessary violence in these summonses, and enacting that certain classes of individuals should not be summoned “in Jus sine permissu (Prætoris).” Prætorian alterations in it.
D. 2. 7.
D. 2. 4.

By the terms of the Condictio this primitive mode of compelling appearance was dispensed with, by means of the Vadimonium, or promise to appear either simply, under bail, by oath, or by nomination of recuperators. On failure of the party to appear at the appointed time, as Cicero, Pro Quintio, says¹, The Vadimonium substituted.
Cap. 14.

¹ That there is no mention of Vadimonium in the Digest is attributed by Heineccius to Tribonian's determination to prevent any recollection of this old form, by expunging it from all the ancient fragments. A comparison of the Collatio Moss. et

Cap. 20.

“Vadimonium est desertum,” and the magistrate, after thirty days’ delay, had power to put the plaintiff in possession of the defendant’s goods. “Ei,” says Cicero, “absenti omnia fortunarum suarum, omnia vitæ ornamenta, per summum dedecus et ignominiam, deripi convenit.” Such were the preliminaries that took place in Jure, and in this way the parties were ready to proceed by one of the five Legis Actiones. I think I have said enough to shew how thoroughly in accordance they were with old Roman habits and feelings. But whatever advantages this early process possessed, of bringing the parties at once into court, of coming rapidly to an issue, of separating law from fact, and deciding on both concurrently, and of obtaining judgment without delay; however agree-

Rom. Legum, Tit. ii. § 6, with D. 47, 10. 7, will shew that the term was really introduced into the Prætor’s edict.

In olden times there was undoubtedly an express formula given to the Plaintiff for binding the Defendant to appear (vadari reum); and that some skill and learning were necessary in preparing it, appears from a passage in one of Cicero’s letters, Ad Q. Fratrem, II. 15, where he speaks of Cæsar’s satisfaction at Trebatius’s presence, because he knew not “in tanta multitudine eorum, qui una essent, quenquam fuisse qui Vadimonium concipere posset.”

able it was to the suitors to have their questions of fact settled by one of themselves, a Roman private citizen; there were, on the other hand, grave obstacles to be encountered. For these forms ere long became oppressed with subtle technicalities; the application of them in practice soon was so beset with difficulties, from the nicety and the rigorous preciseness required in setting them out, that they were instruments of legal oppression, rather than of practical utility; and the truth of the proverb was evinced in their case, “*summum jus summa injuria*¹.” Many other influences were at work too to weaken the hold they once had on the feelings of the people. First and foremost the Peregrini were beginning to assume a position of importance; next, the Disadvantages resulting from the Legis Actiones.

Influences at work to weaken them.

¹ Niebuhr maintains, and with much show of probability, that the real boon conferred by Cn. Flavius, and for which he was subsequently rewarded by the tribuneship, was the publication of each of these Actiones Legis simply and without commentary, in addition to the Calendar of Dies Fasti and Nefasti.

“Fastus erit per quem lege licebit agi,”—even the Poet was acquainted with the technical term, though the Legis Actiones had long since given way to the Formulary Process.

Niebuhr further maintains that Cicero knew well this Jus Civile Flavianum.

jurisdiction of the Prætor was becoming more and more extended; the oppressions of the patrician class too, especially in the administration of justice, had produced a determined spirit of opposition, and a hatred that more than once nearly led to a sacrifice of nationality; while a race of men had been gradually coming into repute and notice, distinguished as much by the vigour of their intellect as by their influence in the state; I mean the class of lawyers, or jurisprudentes. These and other causes, such (inter alias) as the results of successful war against rich¹ and powerful neighbours, were gra-

¹ Such influences as these are most valuable aids in explanation of changes in laws and legislation of every country, on which many good books have been written.

Let me add to those above enumerated, the moral and physical effects, which resulted from the long Punic wars, viz.

First, the enriching of one class, the contractors, and the impoverishing of the old Cives, and consequently the introduction of an aristocracy of wealth; in time this ended in the loss of the old Republican simplicity and the destruction of the patrician class.

Secondly, a taste for wealthy ease and luxury.

Thirdly, the commencement of a love of letters.

And, fourthly, the establishment of a standing army and a conscription. As a general consequence old Roman notions were gradually being lost.

dually producing an alteration of habits; exclusive nationality was beginning to give way to foreign intercourse; the old rough rugged notions were softening down; and the “Jus honorarium” or “Prætorian code” was making the benefit of its equitable improvements on the stern “Jus civile” largely felt. Hence the period was come for the destruction of the Legis Actiones. They had, for some time preceding the Lex Æbutia, and the Leges Juliae, been decaying; when first is not precisely known. The death-blow was inflicted by the laws above mentioned; and therefore I now propose to consider the passage of these laws; in my remarks on which I may at once acknowledge how much every inquirer into this obscure part of Roman history is indebted to Heffter, Zimmern, and Laferrière.

Distribution of the *Legis Ac-
tiones*.

The Legis Actiones had become oppressive, from two causes; one, the tyrannical influence of the patricians, who alone knew these peculiar forms, and never divulged them; the other, the risk attending any mistake committed through inadvertence or ignorance. Two men, however, had done much to destroy these evils—Cn. Flavius and Sextus Ælius¹: the publication by them of these strict and hitherto unknown forms, gave the public that vantage ground, which the patricians had usurped. Hence the latter, no longer having an interest in their preservation, ceased to care for their retention, and looked on their destruction with apathy. The Lex Æbutia, of which we have no remains, was passed undoubtedly with the object of making some changes in the Legis Actiones, somewhere about the end of the sixth or beginning of the seventh century of the city, but it did not go so far as entirely to abrogate them; for in Cicero's day, who certainly knew of this law, and who as certainly did not know the Leges Juliae², some of the Actiones were still in existence as e.g. the Manus injectio

The Lex Æbutia.

¹ The Roman Chitty and Archbold of their day.

² I assume with Heffter that these were the Leges Juliae, passed in Augustus's reign. Cf. Heffter, Comm. in Gaii Institut. Obs. cap. viii. p. 24.

Aulus Gellius, XVI. 10, tells us that these antiquated forms were disposed of (how he does not shew) by the Lex Æbutia, "nisi in legis actionibus centumviralium causarum."

and the Pignoris capio, while the Sacramentum was then reserved for the Judicia Centumviralia. In all probability then the two forms of the Judicis postulatio and the Condictio were those aimed at by this law. A passage in the Oration Pro Roscio Cap. iv. Com. shews us that the Condictio had disappeared and been displaced by the Formulae, while, from some remarks in the same Oration (iv.), and in the De Officiis, III. 15 and 17. we gather that he only knew of two kinds of separate and distinct judicia, the "Judicia Legitima" and the "Arbitria Honoraria," or Judicia decided, not by Civil Law, but by *Prætorian forms*¹. Hence, adopting Heffter's careful summary of the objects of this Lex, we may assume them to have been twofold; one, to preserve intact to the Centumviri the Sacramenti Judicium in private suits, but to reserve questions De Libertate and Civitate for the Decemviri litibus judicandis; the other, to enable parties to proceed "per concepta verba," where the Condictio and Judicis postulatio had formerly been applicable, and to give the Prætor jurisdiction in these cases.

¹ To which Zimmern makes some objections: see his remarks at § 35, note 2.

The Leges
Juliæ.

The two Leges Juliæ were passed in the reign of Augustus, one having reference to Judicia Publica, the other to Judicia Privata. Fragments of these laws have been preserved and commented on by various writers, such as Brissonius, Gravina, Sigonius, and others; one passage in them sufficiently warrants the assertion of Gaius, that thenceforth the Actiones Legis were to be destroyed: "De omnibus cæteris rebus, de quibus inter cives Romanos, in urbe Roma, intrave primum urbis miliarium, controversia erit, . . . per verba concepta agatur."

Second æra.
The Formulary Process.

We bid farewell then to these Actiones Legis, the representations of the rude simplicity of early Roman times; and we arrive at the second æra, that of the Formulary Process. In this part too of my duty I shall pass over the detail respecting these formulæ, which will be found in Mr. Linley's book, or better still, in Gaius's

Commentaries; but I shall dwell a little on their characteristic traits¹.

In the first place, there were four important points of difference between the Formulæ and the Legis Actiones. They were verbal forms, not forms mixed up half of acting, half of speaking; they were separate and specific, not generic; i. e. they were individual cases, specially adapted to

Their first characteristic.

¹ For convenience sake I give a short explanation of them in a note.

The formulæ were legal forms adapted to each particular case brought before the Prætor; commencing with the Judicis datio, setting out the precise point in dispute, and directing the Judex, when he had ascertained the merits of the question, either to adjudicate strictly, or to act in such way as he thought most equitable.

The For-
mulæ.
Their parts.

There were four parts in every formula, in addition to the formal "Judicis datio" by way of commencement:—The Demonstratio, the Intentio, the Adjudicatio, and the Condemnatio.

The Demonstratio was the short, simple statement of the cause of quarrel, e. g. "Quod Aulus Agerius Numerio Negidio hominem vendidit."

The Intentio pointed out to the Judex to what end he should direct his inquiry, i. e. if anything, and what, was due to the plaintiff; as e. g.

"Si paret Num. Neg. Aulo Ager. sestertium x. milia dare oportere;" or it might be, "Quidquid paret N. N. A. A. dare facere oportere."

The Adjudicatio was the permission entrusted to the Judex of making such award in the dispute to one or other of the parties as he thought right: "Quantum adjudicari oportet, judex adjudicato; but the Adjudicatio was a form applicable each peculiar state of circumstances; not being dependent on the words or directions of the law, they were easily varied and adapted to use; and, lastly, they gave more scope to the decision of the Judex.

Their second.

iv. § 11.

Cic. Pro
Rosc. Com.
8.
Pro Tull.
8 and 44.

Extension of Prætor's Judicial Office.

In the second place, the influence of the Prætorian regulation was brought to bear upon them. For Gaius says, that during the reign of the Legis Actiones the edicts of the Prætors were not in use, whereas by these edicts many forms of action had now been introduced. Hence the Formulary Process had a double foundation—the Common Law, and the Equitable or Prætorian Law.

We shall find then, that in this æra the Prætor's judicial office was much extended, and that part of his duty was to transcribe only to three Judicia; viz. familiæ erciscundæ, communi dividendo, and finium regundorum."

The Condemnatio was the power given to the Judex to condemn the defendant to pay, or let him go free.

"Judex N. N. A. A. decem milia condemna; si non paret, absolve."

The strictest observance of the directions contained in the formula was required of the Judex, under the penalty of "making the suit his own."

Sometimes a formula was not set out in full length, for those in "factum concepta" contained usually only an Intentio and a Condemnatio.

from his Album, for the use of the Judex, what formula he thought suited to each case, and even to prefix the name of such Judex to that formula. Another important fact was, that all the formulæ, generally in use, were to be found in the Album Prætoris, and so within reach of everybody; while, in addition to that notoriety, when once the plaintiff had obtained a Judex and the proper formula, there was no need of further recourse to the Prætor, for the Judex then had power to enter up and enforce the judgment. At another part of this work I shall have to speak of the influence of the Prætor. On this subject I need only add, that the transition from the Legis Actiones to the Formulary Process was rendered the less violent, by the fact, that the formulary principle was the basis of each, but, from the excessive rigour and the technical difficulties of the former, the change to the latter was a welcome relief.

Cf. *Lex Rubria*¹, c. xx.
Hawbold's Antiq. 146.
Cic. in Ver.
iii. 12.

¹ In which a formula is given at full length, applicable to the case of parties claiming redress for Damnum, whether Infectum or Datum.

The Formulary process not a violent change.

A careful perusal of the history of the times within which these formulæ flourished, i.e. from A. U. C. 387 to Diocletian's reign, shews how strong a hold, even under the operation of the most powerful internal changes and external circumstances, the old Roman habits and early national traits had upon the people. That gradual development of the law, of which I spoke above, as one of the most remarkable features in the history of this people, is nowhere more visible than in this period. The changes that I have hastily delineated in the law of actions were not isolated facts in the history of their law, nor were they violent reforms, produced by violent counsellors. From the Legis Actiones to the Formulæ was a natural transition, because of the aid that was rendered by the Prætorian office, so from the Formulary Process to the Extraordinaria Judicia the progress was equally natural and gradual.

It is a problem somewhat difficult of solution, to account for the reasons of the constant improvement of legal institutions visible in most civilised countries in the midst of revolution and war. Thus in Rome, in England, and in France, that period of history which is most disfigured with war and discord is remarkable for the steady settlement of the law, and for the decided influence of its teachers. The period I now speak of at Rome illustrates this anomalous condition of facts. Treason and se-Constant improvement of legal institutions at Rome.

 dition displaced one great man after another. Forms of government were violently changed, as the boundaries of the state were ever enlarging themselves, and to the bystanders every circumstance pointed to the utter destruction of all those features that were so completely Roman; and yet the old institutions were preserved, in spirit and in name. One would have thought, that under the Reign of Terror of the Triumvirates, not only liberty, but law, would have vanished; that under the imperial rule, Prætor and Judex would have been merged in an arbitrary officer, nominated by the Emperor and subservient

The Cognitiones Extraordi-nariæ.

D. 50. 16.
178.

to his orders; but such was not the case. The Prætorship was extended far beyond its original limits, and long before the Formulary Process fell into desuetude, the four offices of the Centumvirate, the Judicium, the Arbitrium, and that of the Recuperators, were concentrated, and placed under the Prætor's direction, forming what was called the Ordo Judiciarius. There were however certain judgments, not taken in the ordinary way, but specially intrusted to particular magistrates for particular cases, called Cognitiones Extraordinariæ, and these extraordinary proceedings were all comprised under the general denomination of "Persecutiones in Rem vel in Personam." Of the causes which gave rise to these Extraordinariæ Cognitiones, the most important were, 1st, Proceedings against Tutores suspecti; 2dly, Proceedings relating to Fideicommissa (entrusted to special Prætors); 3dly, Proceedings relating to the improper decision of a Judex, "Qui litem suam fecit;" and, 4thly, Proceedings relating to defaulting and contumacious parties.

On their first introduction these Extra-ordinaria Judicia were unfrequent; but in course of time, and under the influence of new legislation, they came much into vogue, especially when the Emperors themselves sat as judges both of appeal and in original causes. But it was in the provinces that the extension of these Judicia was most felt, for Julianus the lawyer declared, that the power of the Præses Provinciæ to send a suit to the Judex, or try it himself, dates from the second century of the Empire. The introduction of a Provincial President, with tribunal and regulations to aid him, was one of the great changes of Roman notions; and thus the revolution, that was silently at work in one of their institutions, was preparing the way for an important change in another.

It may be worth while to consider, a little more fully, how this period of procedure was arrived at, and how the old forms were at length entirely discarded. It will be seen then, that the first step towards this result was in the distinction

Extraordi-
naria Judicia.

How arrived at.

between the ordinary and extraordinary procedure; because by that a new principle was introduced, of suiting a form of proceeding to the emergency of a particular case, by referring the case itself to the Extraordinariæ Cognitiones, and thus, whenever necessary, disregarding the compulsory enactments of the law.

The old forms got rid of.

This step once taken, all the rest easily followed; and soon civil process became disencumbered of all the old solemnities, as it had been by means of the formulæ of all the old pantomime; the Judex was got rid of for the Prætor, who at once heard and settled the plaint, (cognoscebat), and though a new class of Judices pedanei had been introduced after Diocletian, they were as free to decide, unencumbered by formulæ, and unfettered by any technicalities, as the Prætor himself. At length even the Denunciatio, last relic of antiquity, disappeared, or was removed as tedious and useless in Justinian's time, and nothing more was necessary to bring the matter at once into court, than a short statement of the cause of action, called Libellus.

Thus then we have traced historically the changes in this branch of the Roman Law, which (like the life of man) has three aspects, the time of childhood, or rather of a rough and strong boyhood, marked by a love of freedom, and a rude simplicity, when the law was but a collection of pantomimes and symbolical acts, though completely in accordance with national traits. The period of manhood, when the old simplicity was disdained, and the ancient forms were unfitted for the progress the people had made in arts and letters. And the commencement of old age, when nationality was fast disappearing, and when the law, instead of being part and parcel of the people, was becoming a system, which if more refined, was certainly less vigorous.

To trace the law of a nation like the Romans systematically, to compare it from time to time with their thoughts and feelings, and to bring the inquiry into one to bear upon the history of the other, is ever a useful lesson. For historical investigation is never so valuable as when it throws light upon the moral and intellectual changes of a great people. Those internal causes, that are ever silently but unceasingly at work, are often more worthy of research than the better known external influences that are visible to all. Thus it may be easy to account at once for many alterations in the histories of nations, by such facts as foreign conquests, change of government, increase or decrease of numbers, and others of that sort; but to account for the long hold of old habits and the difficulty attending the formation of new ones, to give a reason for self-introduced changes in institutions and laws, is a task of another kind, which, if more troublesome, will often be found to be more productive of valuable results; because it is a dissection of the nobler parts of a great people: it is an investigation, that enables us to trace the causes of the decay of all their faculties. The real object of all such history should be (to use Savigny's words) "to trace every system to its root, and to discover an organic principle, whereby that, which still has life, may be separated from that which is lifeless."

CHAPTER II.

On the Office of the Roman Magistrate and Judge, at various times.

IN the early days the kings had judicial power; not only in the adjudication of property and persons, but even in the assigning of a Judex, at least so Dionys. x. 1.

Hal., Cicero and Pomponius assert. The powers so conferred upon them were termed De Rep. 11. 21, v. 2. D. 1. 2. 2. 2. Imperium, and were afterwards inherited by the consuls¹. But in the year A. U. C. 387 The Prætorship established. a new office had been established, that of the Prætorship; and later still, that is, in the 6th century of the city, a Prætor

¹ And not only the consuls, but all who presided over the republic with consular power; e.g. the decemvirs and the tribuni militum. Livy, II. 27, speaking of the consul Appius Claudius, says: "quam asperrime poterat, jus de creditis pecuniis dicere," and in Lib. III. 33, adds that the decemvirs "decimo die jus populo singulos reddidisse."

(It is necessary carefully to keep in mind the distinction between the superior and inferior magistrates.)

Peregrinus was elected with the Prætor Urbanus¹.

The Jurisdictio transferred to the Prætors.

As soon as the Prætorship was firmly established, all the Jurisdictio, that till then had been enjoyed by the consuls, was trans-

Imperium, Jurisdictio, Potestas and Decretum. D. 2. 1. 3. 47. 10. 32. 5. 1. 12. 1. Cic. de Leg. iii. 3.

¹ It will not be out of place to introduce here an explanation of two terms, that from the very first period of Roman law, were technically applied to the magisterial office, as well as of one or two other legal expressions peculiar to this part of the law—I mean Imperium and Jurisdictio. In its widest sense Imperium, which is identical with Potestas, was used to indicate all the authority belonging to the superior magistrates, and therefore comprised the Jurisdictio, while the term Jurisdictio was applied by the Roman lawyers to the sum total of those powers possessed by the magistrates in litigations, and other judicial relations between individuals; every thing that related only to process, such as declaring a form, and naming a Judex, being but a part of this Jurisdictio.

D. 1. 21. 1. 1. D. 1. 21. 5. 1.

There were, however, two kinds of “Imperium,” the “mixtum,” and the “merum.” The “merum” designated the magistrates’ judicial authority in criminal matters, and scarcely ever took the denomination of Jurisdictio. By the “mixtum” was understood the full authority with which the Roman magistrates, who had Jurisdictio, were invested.

Now the Jurisdictio consisted “in decretis interponendis, dijudicandisque causis;” or, using the three well-known terms, “dando, dicendo, addicendo.” A Decretum, in its narrowest sense, signified every decision made after an examination, which was the notion of the word in the Imperial times; though probably in a more extended view it comprised every decision rendered by a magistrate with or without any previous investigation. Another term applicable to jurisdictions, and requiring explanation, is “cognoscere,” by which is meant the examination of any business, or the conduct of a legal proceeding before a magistrate, or even before a Judex.

ferred to the Prætors, though the Ædiles also exercised a certain jurisdiction in the affairs of police and commerce. From the domestic the step was a natural one to that of a provincial Prætorship, invested with the same Potestas and Jurisdictio¹; and as the value of this office was soon felt, the number of Prætors was increased at Rome. I shall therefore linger a while, to sketch as briefly as I can the real influence that this new magistracy conferred upon the legal institutions of Rome, more especially upon that branch with which we are now engaged. From the accounts we have of the early history of the Prætorship, especially from Livy's, its creation, in the year A. U. C. 388,² appears to have been the result of a compromise on the part of the plebeians with the patricians, in return for the concession of a plebeian consul; 163 years afterwards Livy mentions the election of four, from 30. 32.

Liv. XXIII.
D. 1. 2. 2.
32.

¹ Though 100 years afterwards they were changed for pro-Consuls and pro-Prætors, that is, Consuls and Prætors whose time of office had just expired.

² According to Ju. Lydus, the Prætor Peregrinus was first chosen B. C. 263. "Peregrinum, i. e. Peregrinos recipientem (ξενοδόκος)".

which it is clear, that the value and importance of these officers had gained ground, and as in the year 418 A.U.C., or 30 years after their first introduction, a plebeian Prætorship was established, we may conclude that each of the contending parties in the state viewed the measure with favour, and that an office brought into being from party motives alone, had soon come to be prized as a national boon. The limits of the Prætorian jurisdiction were, from the very first, clearly marked; not, as Pomponius asserts, to supply the place of the consuls in the state when engaged in war; but, as Livy says with truth, actually to receive that Potestas (Juris dicendi) which the consuls hitherto had had, and which thenceforth was transferred from them. In short, to be, what in time it really was, the most important legal tribunal in the city, and by and by in the provinces, whose presidents were the Στρατηγοὶ ἐπὶ τῶν Ξενῶν, “inter cives et peregrinos jus dicere,” by whose aid the ancient civil law soon became modified and softened; and who introduced

The Præ-
torian Jurisdiction.

D. 1. 2. 2.
27.

a Jus, side by side with it, not in hostility to, or contradiction of it, “quod adjuvaret, suppleret, corrigeretque jus antiquum propter utilitatem publicam.” But that these eulogiums are truthful expressions, and that the great value of this institution is not an imaginary one, resting on the flattering assertions of national writers, I have now to shew: that is, how this important position was obtained, and what was the real influence of the Prætorian courts on the Jus Civile, as well as on the department of Procedure.

There are no countries, the history of whose legal institutions and judicial proceedings furnishes more remarkable coincidences (and in many places direct resemblances) than Rome and England. Among those coincidences, the origin, progress, and development, from a single individual to a great tribunal, and a fixed body of law, of their equitable courts, is one of the most noteworthy, and one that deserves a lengthened narrative; on it, however, I have now no time to dwell. The only fact I wish here to notice is, that in each country a

Roman
and English Equitable Courts
contrasted.

common law was already firmly established, and jealously protected; and in each its rules and regulations were so inelastic, and so manifestly unable to develop with the development of the times, that a change was absolutely necessary; such change was produced in one and the other country by the same means, viz. the influence of a new court, capable of making its decisions suited to the real wants of the suitors that appeared before it. At Rome (for my business now is with her alone), at Rome the Jus Prætorium or Jus Honorarium, had at the outset a very narrow foundation. It began with the right that the Prætors derived from the Lex Cornelia to make an edict; in which it was their wont¹ or their duty, to establish a rule to be observed in every case of a certain nature, during the administration of the office. But gradually growing with the growth of the nation, in Cicero's time it rivalled the fame of the twelve tables, and was adopted as the ground-work of all

Origin of the Jus Prætorium:

De Leg. i. 5

¹ Cf. Cic. de Fin. II. 22 : "Quum magistratum inieris et in concionem ascenderis est tibi edicendum quæ sis observaturus in Jure dicendo."

law studies; until at last it was elevated into the dignity of a code in Hadrian's reign, and was termed Edictum Perpetuum.

At the same time it should be noted that ^{And progress.} it never interfered with the Jus Civile, or altered its regulations; for the Prætor, says ^{De Leg. iii. 3.} Cicero, "Juris Civilis est Custos:" the Præ- ^{D. 1. 1. 8.} torian law, to use the words of Marcian, "Viva vox Juris Civilis est,"—very little is necessary to prove this. In the Roman people alone resided the power of making laws, and conferring the Potestas, or Imperium. This Potestas they delegated to any magistrates they pleased, among whom were the Prætors, nominated by them in the Comitia; as these therefore were in direct connexion with the people, and independent of the senate, or of any overruling aristocratic influence, it was not likely that such a magistracy, created in the palmy days of the republic, when the old forms were still preserved, and the Decemviral code was held in the highest honour, would have acted against the principles of that law, especially as they never had power given them "condere legem." Still it is an undoubted fact, that the edicts of successive Prætors soon grew into a body of law, distinct from the Jus Civile, and side by side with it; and the words of Cicero in the Orat. in Verr., shew how wide-spread its rules and maxims were: "Posteaquam Jus Prætorum constitutum est semper hoc jure uti sumus, sed in re tam usitata, satis est ostendere omnes, antea jus ita dixisse, &c."

II. 1. 44.

Interesting and instructive as the full development of this institution is, I must perforce pass it by, in order to hasten to that portion with which we are just now most concerned; that is, the direct influence of the Prætorian edicts on the Law of Actions; and here too I go at once to the formulary æra.

Influence of the Prætor in edicts on the Law of Actions.

The immediate result of the Lex Æbutia, on judicial proceedings: was, as I have before mentioned, the introduction of verbal forms, "concepta verba," adapted to the particular set of facts in dispute. These forms, be it remembered, were drawn from the Prætor's edict, in which a large store of them was preserved, and added to from year to year, carefully and elaborately prepared.

Now of the three elements contained in the formula (the Demonstratio¹, the Intentio² and the Condemnatio³,) the Intentio is the one that more immediately concerns us at present, because it was on this essential part of the formula that the division of actions into "directæ" and "utiles" was founded, and because the Prætorian courts, seeing the opportunity, offered by the latter class, of extending the benefit of the formulary process to a variety of claimants, hitherto deprived of legal remedies, seized them, and adapted them to their purposes.

Now the Intentio had a double aspect, according as the plaintiff made a claim to something, by force of the Jus Civile, or Jus Quiritarium, or by help of the Prætor's jurisdiction; in the one case the formulæ granted to set forth the cause of action were termed ¹ The statement of the cause of action.

² The plaintiff's demand, whether in law or in fact. Of this Intentio there is a capital example in the Orat. Pro Rose. Com. c. 4.

³ The power given the Judex of finding a verdict.

“formulae in jus conceptae,” in the other “in factum conceptae,” and in time, the actions thus arising were termed “actiones in jus” and “actiones in factum.”

Formulae
“In factum conceptae.”

The former of these, framed on the Jus Civile, were not capable of any development, but it was otherwise with the latter, for as early as was possible, they were resorted to in aid of individuals who were unable to use the privileges of the old law, not because they were Peregrini, but because they were under the power of another, as e.g. Filii familias. The action “in factum,” thus applied, was called Utilis; the benefits of such an elastic process as this was at once perceived by the Prætorian courts, nor were they slow to make use of it, and to apply it even to cases not hitherto foreseen by the edict. In course of time a further application of these Actiones Utiles was made, not only to actions “in factum,” but even to actions “in jus” by “formulae fictitiæ,” in which the Prætor instructed the Judex to decide, upon the assumption that any such conditions of the Jus Civile, as were wanting,

Actiones
Utiles.

and seemed necessary, did actually exist.

Here then was an important revolution in the doctrine of pleading at once introduced; Introduced a change in Pleading. not by positive enactment, because if done in that way, much of the old law itself must have been abrogated, and for that there was no wish; not by a hostile jurisdiction, aiming at a successful rivalry with the old common law, for that would have ended in the destruction of one or the other; but by the application of new ideas to old forms, so happily made as to extend the influence of one, and to renew the life of the other: this then was one portion of the Prætor's mission, and how far it was beneficial to the Law of Actions is clearly evinced in the additions made to the remedies for injuries, which hitherto had in many instances been inapplicable to a large class of cases, and in the use of which a great body of individuals was restricted.

But another, and even greater innovation and improvement arose out of the introduction of interdicts, Interdicts. and which more especially belongs to the Prætorian jurisdiction. I propose now to say a few words about their origin and early history, acknowledging, at the same time, the aid that I, in common with all whose studies are turned to this part of the Roman law, have received from the investigations of Niebuhr, Savigny, and Hugo.

Value of Niebuhr's researches.

Of all the writers on the ancient glories of Rome, it may be said without contradiction, there is not one who was animated with a greater zeal for his subject, or a more earnest desire to solve the difficult problem of Rome's rise and progress, than Niebuhr; nor has there been any writer who has done so much for the development of the history of that mighty people, whether in consequence of the light his own discoveries have thrown upon a tract of land hitherto dark and dismal, and stretching away into barren nothingness; or whether in consequence of the direction he has given to the researches of others, striving to explain his theories or account for his conjectures. To say nothing of the aid he has afforded to the student of history, in tracing out the Roman character in all its detail, in exposing to view "the childhood and youth of the heroic city," and in solving problem after problem of its history and legislation; the student of Roman law owes him a deep debt of gratitude for his acute analysis of some of the most difficult questions in it. Whatever may be the defect of his works (and what great mind is free from errors?), still they will ever be rich store-houses, to which all who would trace the Roman laws to their sources must resort.

It is not surprising, then, that Savigny and Hugo have each acknowledged the value of his labours, and approved the justice of his remarks on the laws of Rome; nor that in this particular part of my inquiries, Savigny adopts the explanation offered by Niebuhr of the origin of these Interdicts, of which I intend to give a short summary.

Acknowledged by Savigny and Hugo in the early history of Interdicts.

Whatever advantages the possession of a portion of the Ager Publicus offered to those who obtained it, in the early times its transfer was attended with this difficulty, Nieb. Vol. II. p. 149. The Ager Publicus.

Cic. contra Rullum, III.
3.
Dion. VIII.
73, x. 32.

that it had not any of the remedies, that were given to secure every other kind of property; that defect was supplied by the supreme power, which conferred the Ager, by means of the possessory interdicts; their connexion with the acquisition of the Ager is proved by Cicero, indirectly by Dionysius, and, according to Festus, by the words of the old edict preserved by Ælius Gallus. Other grievances also were remedied by them, especially those of absentee possessors being ousted, without their knowledge, (clam), from land not sufficiently protected by the law. To the case of possession of articles of private property, they were not so commonly applied, because there were remedies there, which could be obtained with a little trouble; hence, as the provisions of the perpetual edict are principally devoted to questions and regulations concerning the domain, and as the interdicts, both in the Pandects, and in Ulpian's fragments, stand next to them, it may be assumed in confirmation, that these latter related originally to the public lands.

From this view Hugo and Thibaut both dissent, but the former offers no argument in support of his disbelief, and the latter, while he does not absolutely condemn the opinion of Niebuhr and Savigny, refers to some passages of the Code in opposition to that opinion, which scarcely, if at all, throw any light upon the point in dispute¹. Be their origin what it may, their importance is testified by the careful explanation of them given by Gaius and Justinian, by the position they occupy in the Digest, and by the frequent allusions to them in the classical writers² of Rome, and therefore I do not hesitate to consider their nature, their object, and their classification.

See Thibaut's System des Pandekten Rechts, Linley's ed. p. 56.

Gaius, iv. § 135.
Just. 4. 15.
D. 43. 1.

We have seen in the former part of these pages how the ordinary forms of Procedure were freed from the rigorous technicalities and solemnities that tied them down. It was not likely that Possessory Procedure, or suits to obtain or recover

History of Possessory Procedure.

¹ Zimmern partially adopts Savigny's and Niebuhr's theory, though he imagines that some such remedy existed before the Prætorian era, and was shaped into the interdicts by those magistrates.

² Cf. especially Cicero pro Cæcina, passim.

Cic. pro
Mur. c. 12.

D. 44. 7. 37.
43. 1. 1. 3.

Savigny,
das Recht des Besitzes, § 37¹.

possession, would be behindhand in losing the dramatic forms and fictions, the “in-nissima prudentiæ” that surrounded and clogged them. The interdict “uti possidetis” and “utrubi” took the place of the old fictitious combat in suits involving possessory rights. They were assimilated to what were termed mixed actions, because each party was in the position of a demandant, but at the same time they were of a personal nature, although conceived in rem. As possessory suits, then, they had no connexion with other interdicts, beyond that of a common procedure, and being founded on the possession of the plaintiff they assumed as their condition, that the plaintiff had actually acquired a Jus possessionis; therefore it was the business of the plaintiff to prove the existence of the possession in his person: in considering which, Savigny maintains that the Judex, having to look to all the circumstances of the case, would direct the plaintiff’s proofs to that particular time, when the possession was acquired, in order to form a presumption, as to its continuance up to the day, when the claim was brought before him.

¹ See Sir E. Perry’s translation.

In their nature then these Interdicts Interdicts. were possession-suits, i.e. legal modes of protecting possession; what their object was may be seen from contrasting them with the Actio. The essence of that consisted in the previous enunciation by the Prætor, that he would appoint and instruct a Judex to determine them, (assuming that the point in dispute was a question of fact), for every preliminary question of law was settled by the Prætor himself. On the other hand, in the Interdicts there was no mention of a Judex, but of an immediate order, or prohibition of the Prætor, who at once stated the law contained in the edict in the presence of both parties¹. If ¹ Thibaut maintains that the interdict was distinguished from the action by being a summary process. A statement that ought not to be extended into an exceptionless rule. If the defendant acquiesced at once in the terms of the order, then the process was undoubtedly a summary one; but if he refused to accept the terms, and demanded an arbiter, the process was then as dilatory as that of the action, and a host of technical difficulties might occur. In proof of this, compare Gaius's Com. iv. § 165.

then the defendant admitted the plaintiff's demand, the order was made, and the matter was at an end, but if the defendant brought forward exceptions, or traversed, then a Judex or Arbiter was assigned, and then came a formula, and the instruction of a Judex; and therefore, as Savigny says, we may see why interdicts are looked upon as Ordinaria Judicia, and why interdicts proper disappear with the whole Ordo Judiciorum: for the old interdicts were formal decrees intended to serve as an introduction to a formula, and as instructions to a Judex. Before I proceed then to classify and arrange the interdictory process, I will briefly sum up the leading features of this ancient and difficult branch of the Roman Law of Actions.

Their introduction.

The true principle on which their introduction is grounded, undoubtedly, was the social need of public protection against acts of fraud and violence; whether, as in the case of possessory interdicts, considered with reference to the Ager Publicus, or intended to be a check upon Clientes and Coloni refusing to give up a possession, simply precarious, or established as a general permanent institution, in accordance with the recognised maxim, that it is the business of every good citizen to abstain from taking the law into his own hands, and to appeal to judicial authority for aid. In time they became authoritative orders; sometimes prohibitory, sometimes restitutory, and sometimes exhibitory, established in the Prætorian Edict as a permanent part of the Jus Honorarium, and attached emphatically to the Prætor's jurisdiction, by whom alone their special application could be directed.

Gaii Com.
iv. §160, &c.

In classifying them, the grand primary division is that, which has relation to their efficient cause, the authority that sets them in motion—the Prætor—and here we see them in a threefold aspect¹, as prohibitory, as restitutory, and as exhibitory injunctions. The prohibitory interdicts wore the appearance rather of penal judgments², than mere authoritative directions, and are branched

Classification of In-terdicts.

¹ Considered simply as authoritative orders they are properly termed "Decreta."

² See Hugo's Hist. of the Rom. Law, i. § 255.

into two classes—non-possessory and possessory. The intention of the non-possessory was to prevent the infraction of rights of possession belonging to others, whether to a state, a corporation, or an individual. The intention of the possessory was to preserve to the plaintiff¹ his rights of possession, which he already had, by the two general interdicts² “uti possidetis,” and “utrubi,” as well as by certain other special ones.

The restitutory interdicts were intended to restore an individual, to that position, with regard to his rights, of which, he maintained, he was deprived; and therefore their aim also was twofold, according as the claimant sought to recover back his rights in a thing, which were temporarily and wrongfully withheld, or as he sought to make out a title to something, of which he had hitherto not had the possession. Therefore these interdicts are classed as “recuperandæ,” and “adipiscendæ possessionis,” to the first of which belong those "unde vi aut clam," "de vi," "de precario," and "ad exhibendum;" to the second, those "quorum bonorum," "sectorium¹," and, above all, the "salvianum²." The Exhibitoria³ were, according to Justinian, in the nature of peremptory orders, issued by the Prætor, to produce to the view of the Court any person or thing, about which there was a disputed claim. These interdicts were most frequently applied for by a Paterfamilias, or a Dominus servi, and therefore we find under this class those, "de homine libero exhibendo," "de liberis exhibendis," "de uxore exhibenda ducendaque," still the production of moveable property might also be conferred in this way, as in the case "de tabulis exhibendis."

¹ Retinendæ Possessionis.

² The first applicable to immoveables (nec vi nec clam nec precario possessæ), the second to moveables.

It is unnecessary to proceed further in explanation of these interdicts. My prin-

The advantage derived from the extension of the Interdicts.

¹ The Interdictum sectorium was a special one given to those who bought "publica bona," who were termed Sectors. Gaii Comm. iv. 146.

² The Salvianum was given to the owner of a Fundus or country estate against his tenant Colonus over such property as the Colonus had agreed to pledge as surety for his rent (Mercedes).

³ Exhibere est in Publicum producere et videndi tangendique hominis facultatem præbere. D. 43. 29. 3. 8.

cipal intention, in dwelling upon them thus far, was to shew, first, that some equitable addition to the comparatively few and narrow remedies of the old common law was required, “ex necessitate rei ;” and, secondly, that, but for the establishment of a Prætorian jurisdiction, unshackled by the restraints of old and unelastic forms, and armed with full freedom of action, such equitable remedies as these, however urgently needed, could never have been so sufficiently supported, as to become recognised law. The extension of remedies to all classes, and embracing all claims, belonged to the Prætors’ province. Skilfully and usefully was that portion of their duties performed, and without attempting to oust the jurisdiction, or rival the authority of the Jus Civile, they so polished the rough body of that law, and brought into harmony the “disjecta membra” of legislative enactments, and customary observances, as to build up gradually a code, the benefits of which have been felt in our days, and the regulations of which have been incorporated in the rules and decisions of our own Courts of Equity.

I purposely abstain from any notice of the other superior magistrates in Rome, because their official labours were not connected with that province of the law, with which I am now engaged; but I deem it right, before advancing to the remaining portion of my present task, to say a few words, on that very important branch of the higher magistrates' authority, the Jus edicendi, and to shew what influence it exercised upon the whole body of the law.

Such a constitutional power as this, The Jus Edicendi. though not conferred by any positive fundamental law, (for it was founded on ancient customary observance, not on statute,) was, in addition to its utility, a matter of necessity. It was a useful custom, because, for all those, who appeared as suitors in Court, the leading principles by which each magistrate meant to be guided in his year of office were published. It was a necessary one, on account of the insufficiency of the Jus Civile, and the constant enlargement of the Jus Gentium, owing to the increased influence of the Peregrini, and the extension of commerce. Armed with this Jus edicendi, the Prætors were, so to speak, armed, indirectly, with the power of enlarging and improving the laws. If in each edict some principles crept in, whose advantage was not always confirmed by experience, no great mischief could permanently result from that; for as these edicts were "annuæ leges," every succeeding Prætor might strike out any portion of his predecessor's maxims, that did not meet with his approval: whilst, on the other hand, as he had full power to retain all he pleased, in process of time a volume of law grew up, forming part of the Jus scriptum, invested with authority, and causing the Jurisprudence of Rome to advance in a constant, steady, and uniform progress of equity. In this way the Prætorian courts were enabled to bring their principles in harmony with those of the Civil Law, and this is what the ancient lawyers mean, when they say, "*Jus Prætorium Prætores introduxisse adjuvandi vel supplendi Juris Civilis gratia*¹."

¹ It should be borne in mind that Rome was the common country of all citizens who, wherever they had hitherto resided, were subject to her jurisdiction on their arrival there. Cf. Gell. xx. 10 (sed postquam Prætores, &c.) D. 4. 2. 3. 1. D. 48. 2. 12. Pr. The cities of Italy having been already made municipia, and having thus obtained incorporation with Rome, were invested with an almost complete administration of their own interests. (Cic. contra Rull. II. 34. D. 39. 2. 4. 3 & 4. C. 12. 1. 16.) In which the presiding Magistrates, called Duumvirs, or Quatuorvirs, had full power of jurisdiction—Magistratus iuridicundo. In some cities a Præfectus Juri dicundo presided, but they were exceptive cases, and were called præfecturae. (Liv. 26. 16. Cic. ad Div. XIII. 11.) Egypt being a conquered country and a province, the laws there were administered by a Præfectus who, though not really a Roman Magistrate (Tacit. Ann. XII. 60), had the Legis Actio given him as part of his voluntary jurisdiction. (D. 40. 2. 21.) In Alexandria a Juridicus was joined to the Præfect, who also had the Legis Actio, as well as the Tutoris Datio, by a constitution of Marcus Aurelius. (D. 1. 20. 1.) In the reign of this emperor the power and influence of the Prætors were diminished by the creation of Viri Consulares to preside in the four districts into which Italy was divided.

Savigny, in his Geschichte des Römischen Rechts in Mittel Alter, has most ably handled this topic. See Cathcart's translation of the first vol. chap. 2.

CHAPTER III.

Of the Inferior Judges.

I HAVE now to speak of those Roman Judges¹ who, though far inferior to the dignitaries I have lately treated of, yet played a very important rôle in the proceedings by Action. Of these the most noteworthy are the Judices, the Recuperatores, the Centumviri, and the Judices Pedanei. For the earliest account of the first of these we must go back to the Actiones legis, and the Decemviral Code, where we find mention made, not only of a Judex, but of an Arbiter. The Judicis Postulatio was one of those *Actiones*². A dices.

The Ju-

¹ It is difficult to find an apt English expression for these officers: in some respects they correspond, though very slightly, to our jurymen, but in others they differ toto calo, as will be seen in the course of these pages. The English functionary they most resemble is the Judge of a County Court.

² Whether there was to be any real difference between the functions of Judex and Arbiter probably depended on the case itself; in Cicero's time this distinction was not very precisely marked. Pro Murena, c. 12, fin.

law of the Twelve Tables speaks of a Judex, Gell. xx. 1. Cic. de Leg. i. 21. or Arbiter, and of three Arbitri. The existence of the Judex, as a necessary part of a civil suit, did not cease with the era of the Legis Actiones, it was preserved in that of the formulæ, "Judex esto" being the proper formal commencement of the Prætor's directions, never "Arbiter esto;" for whether the individual, thus appointed, was to act as Judex or Arbiter depended on the contents of the formula. If, however, Recuperatores were desired, and not a Judex, then the formula ran, "Recuperatores Gaius, iv. 46. sunt." Whatever the appointment was, whether Judex, or Recuperatores, it was merely temporary, ceasing with the termination of the suit which called them into existence, and in which they acted solely by Cic. pro Cluent. 43. the consent of the parties themselves.

The influence of the Plebeian element The Judges. was scarcely felt, in the times when first the Judices were created, for although the efforts of Servius Tullius had given some degree of social organisation to the Plebeians, and a Centumviral Tribunal was erected, yet it was a long time, ere the Roman people shook off the hold, that the Senate, and the Patrician body had got on the Judicia and the Judices; but they did eventually introduce a Plebeian element into the Decuriæ Judicum. The list of these Decuriæ was prepared annually by the Prætor, and fixed up conspicuously in the Forum, he taking an oath not to admit any but men of repute into the list, (Judices selecti et in albo relati).

Cic. pro
Cluent. 43.
Phil. v. 5.
Hor. Sat. i.
4. 123.

At first their number was 300; this was afterwards increased by Augustus to 1,000, and this again to several thousands. The nomination by the Prætor in the Formulæ was all that was necessary to render an individual a Judex. He could not decline the office (for it was a public duty) save by special privilege, or by some legitimate excuse, or from some legal incapacity. On his nomination he took an oath to discharge his duties faithfully; and, if he was not a

D. 50. 4.
18. 14.
D. 50. 5. 13.
2 & 3.
Cic. Phil. v.
5.
D. v. 1. 12. 2.

¹ Note the phrases "Sumere Judicem," Cic. pro Flacc. 21, pro Quinct. 8, the acceptance of a Judex by the parties: "Regicere ejerare Judicem," Cic. in Verr. II. 12, the rejection of the Judex appointed by the Magistrate: "Judicem ferre," Cic. de Orat. II. 70, pro Rosc. Com. 15, the special nomination of a Judex by the parties.

lawyer, he was permitted to obtain the assistance of one as his adviser, as also, sometimes, of the magistrate who nominated him. In Cicero's days, and during all the formulary era, the seats¹ of the Judices were surrounded by such skilled advisers, to whom, in general, the arguments of the counsel in the cause were directed².

Pro Quinct.
C. 1. 2. 6.
10. 17.
Pro Rosc.
C. c. 8.
Gell. xiv.
2.

The sentences of these Judices and Arbitri were termed, generally, Judicia privata, but there was this distinction between them, that as the Judices had cognizance of debts and obligations of a certain fixed value, their decisions were in strict accordance with the subject in dispute, while those of the Arbitri

Judicia privata.

¹ Called Subsellia, the locality was the Forum or Comitium, or Consueta loca, which were always public. D. 5. 1. 59.

² Whether the Judices were allowed to decide in questions of law is a moot point—though, on the authority of Zimmern and Walther, I should say they were not. A French writer of repute, M. Laferrière, imagines they were, and cites Cicero de Orat. 1. 38, 39, in support of that view. The first of these passages, however, will scarcely support his position, that in the Judicia the Judices decided questions of law; and in the second passage a distinct difference is made between the proceedings In jure, (i.e. before the Pretor,) and those In judicio—an interpretation of Cicero's meaning that Brissonius adopts. Cf. Briss. sub verbo "Jus."

Adopting this view then they differ very materially from our Judges of a County Court.

were not so rigorous; they were not bound, as the Judices were, to find all or nothing, but, as Festus explains it, "Quantum æquius et melius, id dare." Moreover these Judicia privata were either Legitima or Non legitima, according as they were delivered in Rome, or within a mile of it, by a single Judex in a suit where none but Cives Romani were the parties, or as any of these conditions were wanting.

Cf. Cic. pro
Rosc. Com.
4.

Gaius, iv.
103. Cic. pro Rosc.
Com. c. 5.

The Recu-peratores.

The functions of the Recuperatores may be very briefly dismissed, for they also were given by the Prætor on the application of the parties *In jure*¹, but their office was confined entirely to the settling the rights of the claimants to a Res (rei persecutio) and to adjudging the recovery of the thing in dispute to one or the other in such matters as required a prompt decision.

Gaii, iv.
185. Cic.
Div. 17.

The Cen-
tumviri.

The Centumviri formed an important

¹ In a fragment of Gallus Aquilius, the expression "reciperatio" refers to the settlement of public property between Cives Romani and Peregrini after a war; but this institution, then springing from the Jus Gentium, soon passed into the Jus Civile. As regards the Recuperatores, they were proposed by the Magistrate, but might be objected to by either party.

branch of the inferior magistrates. They were erected into a permanent tribunal in the early days of Rome, in which character Quintilian speaks of them in opposition to the Judex Privatus. In the first stage of the existence of this Judicature their number was 105, three centumviri being furnished by each of the 35 tribes; though in later years that number was much increased. Divided into four Consilia or Senatus, they thus formed separate and distinct tribunals, the president of which was a *Prætor*¹. The business that was transacted in these courts embraced everything relating to Quiritarian ownership, and all questions arising out of successions; a jurisdiction aptly marked by the spear suspended over their seats of office, "the symbol of Quiritarian ownership;" and in all the questions so brought before them, they decided on the law² as well

Inst. Orat.
IV. 1. 57.
ed Spald.

Festus, sub voce.

Cic. de Orat. 1. 38.

Gaii, iv. 16.

¹ Some lawsuits were carried successively before two of these Consilia, others were heard before the whole four collectively, each one of which gave a separate judgment. Cf. Quintilian, v. 2, 1. XI. 1. 78, XII. 5. 6. Plin. Ep. 1. 18, IV. 24, VI. 33. D. 31. 2. 76.

² Hence the importance and influence of their Præjudicia. Val. Max. VII. 2. 3. 4. 5. Quint. Inst. Orat. v. 2.

The Cen-
tumviri, considered as Public Officers;

as Judices.

as the facts. We may judge of the great importance of this court, from the gravity of the matters administered there, and from the testimony borne thereto by Pliny and Quintilian. Before Cicero's time some of the most influential and renowned lawyers of the day had made these courts celebrated; it was there, too, that one of his most skilful speeches, that Pro Cæcina, was recited; and therefore I propose to point out in a few words the connexion between this branch of Roman judicial organisation and the others. And first, let us consider them as tribunals; in this light we see at once that the Centumvirs were the representatives of the sovereignty of the Roman people; the Judices, the Arbitri, and the Recuperators, being the representatives of individual interests, whether in Rome or the provinces, though connected with the higher magistracy as legally appointed delegates. Let us view them, secondly, with relation to their powers; and here we find, that all the questions, that affected a Roman in his status, or family, were referred to the province of the Centumvirs, while to the Judices and Arbitri belonged all Prætorian actions, all personal actions arising out of contracts, and all mixed and arbitrary actions. To the Recuperators were referred possessory rights, actions for excessive exactions, and "actiones utiles in factum." Each of these courts was distinct in itself, there was no appeal from one to the other; for, as I have said before, in civil matters there was no appeal at all: but here the courts of the Centumviri differed somewhat from the others, as I have above shewn.

It remains for me now only to add a few remarks on the Judices Pedanei, in order to complete this chapter of the Roman magistrates, superior and inferior. Heineccius dismisses this class of officers very briefly, as being merely the friends of the Judex, lawyers by profession, who sat with him to aid him in the cause. Zimmern, however, has devoted a chapter to the careful analysis of their history, and the result he arrives at is, that they formed that body of municipal magistrates, termed

The Ju-
dices Pedanei.

Curiales, whose jurisdiction was less important than that of the magistrates properly so called. He contends that they took the name of Judices from the fact, that they themselves sat to hear causes, and had no right to remit the parties to another Judex; while the term Pedanei was applied to them, to shew that they had no tribunal of their own: whatever they were, this is clear from the Code and the Digest, that they had cognizance only of matters of an inferior nature to the other judges, and that therefore they occupied a very inferior position¹.

C. 3. 3.
D. 2. 7. 3. 1.

¹ In the following passages, D. 3. 1. 1. 6, D. 2. 7. 3. 1, we find that a Postulare was addressed to a Judex Pedaneus, as well as a Vocatio in Jus heard before one of them; this shews that they were not Judices dati.

CHAPTER IV.

The various Divisions of the Actio.

IN several passages of the Digest we shall find considerable variation in the definition of the word Actio, as regards the limitation of its objects. Thus Papinian Definition of the word Actio. D. 44. 7. 28. speaks of it exclusively with reference to a Persona; Ulpian states that it has a general and a special signification; in the first it refers to a Res as well as to a Persona, in the second to a Persona only: in other passages its sense is more enlarged, embracing that which is termed Persecutio¹, and opposed as well to the Præjudicia², as to the Interdicts, and Prætorian stipulations. D. 44. 7. 37. To reconcile these apparent discrepancies, it should be remembered, that originally there was no other Action, but that In personam; that those In rem, or Petitiones, were introduced at a later period; and that for convenience' sake the two were both comprised in the single word Actio. To arrive at any clear, and precise notions of the distinction of actions into their separate kinds, we must be guided by the motives which have led to their classification; of these some refer to their essence, that is, the link which unites them with the rights they protect, whilst others regard the forms of procedure, of which I have already spoken; the first of these shews us their practical development, the second their historical.

¹ Applied to personal and real actions. N.B. The word Realis never occurs in the sources, Personalis does.

² Or preliminary investigations of some doubtful point in a suit, in order to aid the Judex in the decision of the whole question.

Gaii Com.

iv. 91.

D. 44. 7. 25. actions is, that which is given by Gaius,

D. 44. 2. 14.

2.

l. iv. 6. 1. by Ulpian, by Paulus, and by Justinian,

Actio In

Rem and In Personam.

In Rem and In personam, the explanation of which is to be seen in the ancient and valuable text of a Jurisconsult much older than Justinian's time, but reproduced by him in the Institutes. From an examination of this text, contrasted with the words of Gaius and Ulpian, we obtain the following results; first, that this division is a general and universal one, embracing all actions whatever; secondly, that in it are contained two specific forms of the same genus, designated by Actio in Personam, or all those proceedings, that are remedies in the case of obligations, and Actio in Rem, or the remedies that protect every other right, not arising Ex Obligationibus.

Applying this general division to the different classes of rights, we shall find, that as only those legal remedies, which protect obligations, are comprised in the Actio in Personam, so the Actiones in Rem protect all the subjects related to the right of things (Jus in Rem), to the right of succession, and to the right of family, that is, to property, and the Jura in Re. Briefly summing up these remarks, it appears, that to the Jus in Rem corresponds the Actio in Rem; to the Jus in Personam, the Actio in Personam: but further, for the purpose of obtaining a clear analysis of the division we are engaged in, we may consider actions with reference to the individual against whom they are directed. Let it be remembered then, that in the Actio in Personam the defendant was determined, and known, i.e. the action was against A; while the Actio in Rem was brought against a defendant unascertained, and unknown, that is, against A or B, as the thecase might be¹. At the same timewe shall find exceptions² to this rule, for in certain cases³ personal actions were extended to undetermined defendants, *actiones in rem*⁴ to determined ones. From this primary division the transition to the additional class of mixed actions is simple enough. In nearly all the Actiones in Rem there were two objects, the principal one, viz. the recovery of the Res, and the subordinate one, that of some additional demand arising out of it, Mixed Actions.

¹ That is before the violation of the right, because the only person who can break the obligation is he who enters into it, whilst in the other case, as any person can cause the violation which produces the action, so before it can be ascertained who the defendant is, the violation must have been made.

² To this class of exceptive cases may be referred some of what are termed mixed actions; for which see further on.

³ E.g. The Actio Aquæ Pluviæ, the Interdict Unde Vi, the Interdict Quod Legatum.

⁴ The Hereditatis Petitio, Actio Pauliana, the Vindicatio Dotis.

in the shape of indemnity, for consumption of the produce of the Res, or for the deterioration of the Res itself; yet still these actions remained actiones in rem: there were, however, three actions founded on obligations, and relating to partitioning rights and claims, D. 10. 1. 1. which, though properly termed personal, were remarkably distinguished from other personal actions, in this fact, that the question of property (which is the peculiar mark of Actiones in Rem) might be decided at one and the same time. In two of them, specially relating to partition, (the Familiæ herciscundæ and the Communi dividundo Actiones), the question of the plaintiff's title, if he was in possession of the thing, was bound up with that of the partition; while in the third (the Actio finium regundorum) the real object of the defendant was, as the words of the above law run, the Vindicatio Rei: hence Justinian says of this class of actions, "*mixtam causam obtinere videntur tam in rem, quam in personam*¹."

¹ The formula of adjudication peculiar to these actions may be seen in Gaius, IV. § 42.

Actiones
Stricti Juris.

c.5.

I pass on now to another important division of Actions, the clear understanding of which is a key to certain kinds of action, mentioned in the Justinianean body of laws, the Actiones Stricti Juris, and Bonæ Fidei, the Condictiones and the Arbitrariæ Actiones. The words of Cicero in the Oration Pro Rosc. Com. at once point out the existence of two kinds of private suits, the Judicia and the Arbitria; and shew that in the first the strict letter of the law was required, in the second not only was it not insisted on, but principles of equity might be introduced,—a contrast preserved by him in the epithets Legitima and Honoraria, applied respectively to each of them¹; and characterised still further by the men-

¹ On this part of the subject see a remarkable passage in Seneca de Beneficiis, III. 7: “Ideo melior videtur conditio causæ bonæ si ad judicem, quam si ad arbitrium mittatur, quia illum formula includit, et certos, quos non excedat, terminos ponit; hujus libera et nullis adstricta vinculis religio*, et detrachere aliquid potest et adjicere; ubi id, de quo sola sapientia decernit, in controversiam incidit, non potest ad hæc sumi Judex ex turba selectorum quem census in album et equestris hereditas misit.”

* Discharge of “official duty,” in which technical sense it is frequently used in the Roman Law. Cf. D. 22. 5. 13. D. 42. 1. 33. D. 48. 8. 11. C. 5. 71. 5.

tion of the formula usually appended to them, either “ex fide bona” or “ut inter bonos bene agier” or “quid æquius melius.”

Topica, xvii.
De Off. iii.
15. 17.

It is evident, then, that in his day two kinds or modes of proceeding had been established; in one, where the Jus Strictum was observed, the matter was decided by an individual selected out of the list of Judices; in the other, where Bona Fides and principles of equity were permitted, the dispute was

Actiones
Bonæ Fidei.

settled by some individual, chosen indiscriminately out of the citizens, and called Arbiter: it will not, however, be out of place slightly to analyse the motives that led to such a distinction. I stated at the outset of these pages, that it is the business of the state to provide for the regulation of the proper enjoyment of every individual's rights, and that each possessor of rights in and to a thing looks for the protection of his property to the administrators of the laws. If the laws, as originally declared and administered, were wide enough and elastic enough to embrace all the mutual engagements of men, then, undoubtedly, the Strictum Jus alone would be the sufficient rule. But however simple at the outset may be the rules and regulations of a state or society, in process of time the questions at issue will not be confined to infractions of rights regarding property or possession, but a variety of collateral points must come in; among others the engagements or agreements that the individual enters into with another. These from their novelty and variety necessarily cannot be foreseen, so as to be provided for by the laws of a state, and much, if not all, of their observance must depend upon the principles of honour and honesty that influence the mass, until, from their bearing upon the business of every-day life, they become objects invested with a factitious importance; then they must in some way be provided for by the laws of the state, and, if no established court can take cognizance of them, either one must be established for the purpose, or fictions must be resorted to to bring them within the scope of the established courts. These mutual engagements, or undefended agreements, not judicial but moral, were watched with great care by the Roman jurisprudence; and, under the name of Bona Fides, received as much legal sanction as rights directly resulting from property. The protection of property rights, of course, was a simple and easy form by the aid of the Judex, and the Jus Civile, or common law; but in cases depending on the Bona Fides of one of the parties, each being of opinion that he had right on his side, and yet ready to admit that he might be deceived, the only course was to submit the dispute to the decision of an impartial third party, and to agree to abide by his judgment: the object of this third party or arbiter, thus chosen by their mutual consent, being to decide upon the merits of a case not depending on the Strictum Jus, he necessarily was able to look at it unconstrained by technicalities, and in any light which seemed just and equitable to him.

Hence, then, every strict right among the Romans, when infringed, was remedied by means of a Stricti Juris Actio, generally

The Conditiones
classified.

called Condictio, at the hands of a Judex; whilst the remedies for infringements of all other rights, administered by an Arbiter, were termed Bonæ Fidei Actiones. Of the Conditiones there were three classes, distinguished both by their formulæ and by some important practical rules. The first of these was called "certi conditio," or "si certum petetur," in which the object sought to be recovered was a fixed sum of money, and the formula ran "si paret, centum dari oportere;" in the second, the object was to obtain the transfer of some indeterminate Res, not ready money, and here the formula ran "si paret, hominem Stichum dare oportere;" the third class was called Incerti Conditio, its object being the recovery of everything not included in the other two, but like the second, also uncertain, and its formula running in this way, "quidquid dari fieri oportet."

Intention of the Actiones Bo-næ Fidei.

The Actiones Bonæ Fidei had no such distinctions as the above; their object was simply to obtain the fulfilment of such agreements as every honest man ought to be willing to execute, an object expressed in their formula, Quidquid dari fieri oportet ex fide bona. To sum up then briefly what has been above exhibited; the Actiones stricti juris were actions in the full proper sense of the word; the Actiones bonæ fidei were neither so definite, nor so rigorous; in other words, the former were the rule, the latter the exception. The distinctive sign of one and the other was the employment of Judex or Arbiter as the case might be, and therefore, when with the ancient Ordo Judiciorum the old distinction of Judex and Arbiter disappeared, the primitive system of actions was destroyed also.

I now go on to explain what the Arbitrariæ actiones were; and if we were to take simply the text of the Institutes of Justinian on this subject, we might fairly conclude that they are only another expression for Bonæ fidei actiones. But in reality these Arbitrariæ actiones have this distinct character, that they were intended to be not so much positive and direct judgments to restore, or to pay in the Arbitrariæ actiones;

J. 4. 6.
§ 28—30.

their distinctive character.

first instance, as friendly directions by the Arbiter how the defendant was to satisfy the claimant's demands; if this direction was disregarded or refused, then they became positive judgments. In other words, the Actio arbitraria was either an attempt to reconcile the parties, by an equitable opinion on the case, or else it was a regular process. The words of the text, to which I have above referred, point to this view, "permittitur Judici ex æquo et bono secundum cujusque rei naturam, æstimare quemadmodum actori satisfieri oporteat," a confirmation of which may be seen in the D. G. 1. 63. 68th law of the Digest de Rei Vindicatione, in which the Judicis arbitratus is clearly mentioned, in connexion with a general rule on the subject of the judgment to restore a thing. What then were the Actiones arbitrariæ thus characterised? They were actions not tied down by the "Strictum Jus," but capable of receiving such modification as the Arbiter pleased; therefore they did not include the condictiones, or the Actiones civiles ex delicto, whilst they did include those bonæ fidei, in rem, and prætoriae. The modification of which they were susceptible, by means of the arbitraria formula, might lead one to suppose that they embraced all unrestricted actions whatever; but such was not the case, for though every Arbitraria actio was an arbitrium, every arbitrium was not an *Arbitraria actio*¹. This special form of procedure applied to all equitable actions, where the object was the restitution or production of a Res, and to none others. By way of summary, then, we may classify the Actiones arbitrariæ thus: Classification of the act. arbitr. First, the Actio in rem having a formula petitoria in the Intentio; secondly, Interdicts exhibitory and restitutory, where no recourse was had to proceedings by way of sponsio; thirdly, the action "de eo quod D. 13. 4. certo loco;" and, fourthly, Personal actions in factum, to which the Formula arbitraria could be applied.

¹ Therefore, in Gaius, IV. 141 and 163—165, be careful not to confound arbitrium with the arbitraria formula in every class of actions, but confine his words to interdicts of which he is there speaking.

CHAPTER V.

A Sketch of Roman Proceedings at Law.

Days for holding courts.

Cf. Macrob.
Sat. 1. 16.
Dion Hal.
vii. 58.

Suet.
Claud. 20.
and Oct.
32. Gaius,
ii. 279.

IN this part of my labour I shall consider the time and place of commencing civil proceedings before I speak of the mode of carrying on suits. In the early period of Roman history we know that there were certain days marked out for the administration of justice, (every ninth day) called *nundinæ*¹, a regulation introduced by the Lex Hortensia for the special benefit of the country folks coming to market: these days, thus devoted to legal business, were afterwards increased, until in the reign of Marcus Aurelius they numbered 230. Under the emperors, we read of sittings termed "rerum actus," held in the winter and summer-months at Rome. In the provinces these periodical sittings or sessions were fixed at their "conventus" by the Magistrates who presided in the province with the full Jurisdictio¹. On the introduction of Christianity, every day but Sunday was a court-day, with the exception of certain holidays (religious and civil). The Magistrate had the power of fixing the number of and the days for these sessions, and it was his duty to frame regulations for that purpose. If in these sittings the business was conducted before the Magistrate seated in his chair of office, it was then said to be done pro tribunali, and those cases in which a Causæ Cognitio or previous investigation was required, could only be so settled. If the business was unimportant enough to be settled summarily the proceedings were heard de plano, and the judgment was affixed to the foot of the libellus.

¹ The technical term for non-judicial days was Dies feriati.— D. 2, 12, 2, and 6.

Cf. Cod.
Theod.
de Feriis,
19. 21. 22.
24.

D. 37. 1. 3.
8.
Frag. Vatic.
156. 161.
163. 165.

D. 1. 16. 9. 1.

¹ "Æstivos menses," says Cicero ad Att. v. 14, "rei militari dare, hibernos jurisdictioni:" in the Republican times these itinerant sessions (conventus) were very frequent, but the word conventus was also used to signify not only the sessions but the towns where they were held.—Cf. Cic. Verr. v. 11.

Place for holding courts.

The Comitium or the Forum was the proper place for hearing suits, even from the time of the Decemviral code, where the rule is thus laid down: “ni Pagunt in comitio aut in foro, ante meridiem causam conjicito.” There the superior Magistrates took their seats on their curule chairs, while the Judices and the other inferior Magistrates appeared on their subsellia.

Changes made in the Imperial times.

In the period of Roman vigour, when arms and eloquence made her name renowned over the world, and the voice of a Cicero was heard in the Forum enlarging on the deeds of a Scipio, these public courts were crowded to listen to the wit combats of the great lawyers; but when her old glory was fallen, and nothing of her greatness was left but the name, such open pleadings were put down, and instead of the Forum, suits were heard in the Basilica, or even in less frequented spots, the Auditoria and the Secretaria; a change detrimental alike to liberty and eloquence. “Alas,” says Tacitus, “how much injury have these Auditoria and Secretaria, where now nearly all suits are heard, done the eloquence of our bar." What was still worse, or rather what was a direct consequence of substituting comparative secrecy for openness, the Magistrates' tribunal being often concealed from the rest of the court by a curtain, and persons of rank having the privilege of free communication with the curule chair, bribery and corruption of so open and barefaced a kind were practised, as to provoke an indignant remonstrance from the Emperor Constantine.

Dial. de Caus. Corr.
Eloq.

In a former part of this work I alluded to the method of commencing proceedings, in the rude æra of the Republic, by a summons¹, on the plaintiff's part, of the defendant, and by an opportunity given this latter personage of avoiding violence by a vadium and by offering pledges or bail to appear, called Vindex¹. This principle of casting on the plaintiff the business of summoning a defendant continued in vogue for a long time, as may be seen from a statement of Gellius, that in a difficulty as to the plaintiff's power to summon a Quæstor before the Prætor, he shewed from Varro that it was allowable, and accordingly it was done.

The Proceedings in court.

¹ The distinction between the Actio in Rem and in Personam at this period was marked by the special form of commencement peculiar to each. Every "in Rem actio" began by the symbolical act of the "manum consortum," the explanation of which is told by Aulus Gellius (20, 10) in an amusing account of his posing a "grammaticum celebri hominem fama," by asking him what the expression meant. On his stating, that it was not his business "clienti promere jura," as he was a grammaticus not a consultus, and better versed in poetry than in law, Gellius cited Ennius where he had met with it. The grammaticus confessing himself beaten, a friend of Gellius explained the phrase "man. cons." to mean that in any suit involving the right to possess a Res in being and in sight or at hand, (whether an ager

Manum conserere.

D. 2. 4. 22.
1.

Lib. 13. c. 13.

Gaius, iv.
46. 183.

Alterations in the law of summons.

D. 2. 4. 2.
D. 2. 12. 1.

D. 2. 4. 18.

This power of summoning a defendant so granted to a plaintiff, received several modifications and changes in the course of time: thus certain personages were specially privileged; at certain seasons of the year a summons could not be taken out; every man's house too was privileged against a summons, until eventually all violence or anything else,) it was the custom for the parties holding one another's hands to make their claim before the magistrate in proper form. The man. cons. was then followed by the Judicis Postulatio, whereas the In personam actio commenced at once with the Judicis postulatio.

¹ "Ab eo dictus quod vindicat, quominus, is qui pressus est teneantur."—Festus.

in the matter was forbidden, and by an edict it was enacted, that the giving simple Gaius, 4. ordinary caution, or a fidejussor, should be substituted for the vindex, and then the whole form of proceeding was changed. Instead of the In jus vocatio, or summons taken out by the plaintiff before the Prætor, the parties entered into a special agreement¹ (called in the Digest Stipulatio in judicio sistendi causa facta, and satisfactio) to appear on a given day In judicio; when, if the defendant did not make his appearance, the Prætor gave judgment by decreeing a Missio in possessionem bonorum ejus to the other party².

In causes tried pro Tribunali at Rome the parties appeared and were heard immediately if it was possible, but business was not so expeditiously performed in the provinces; there all the causes were put down

Mode of proceeding in the Provinces.

¹ Cf. Cicero Pro Tullio, 20, where this agreement is termed Vadimonium.

² Two passages in the Digest illustrate this, and are also remarkable as describing the defendant's offence of keeping out of the way by the very word that has been appropriated by our law—latitat, "Qui fraudationis causa latitabit," &c., D. 2, 4, 17, and D. 42, 4, 7, 1.

Cic.in Verr.
ii. 2. 15. in a list without order and called on indiscriminately, whenever the day of hearing causes, which was decided by lot, was settled; hence the "gratia fallacis Prætoris vicerit urnam" of the Poet. In the days of the Legis Actiones suits were tried conformably to the formalities of one of those actiones, but under the Formulary Process the business commenced by a statement of the plaintiff's claim delivered by him to the defendant, termed Editio actionis. The special formula then followed. If there happened to be one in the Prætor's edict, that was perfectly adapted to the point in dispute, it was easy to draw up all the pleadings. The above passage of the Digest is in singular analogy with the principles of our law of pleading, the reason for the editio actionis being stated to be, that the defendant might know what formula (or form of action) was adopted, so as to enable him to plead thereto with certainty. But if a previous inquiry (causæ cognitio) was necessary in order to ascertain what particular formula was required, or if the point

D. 2. 13. 1. Proceedings under the Formulary Process.

D. 14. 5. 2.
42. 8. 10.

in dispute was one not already provided for by the Edict, then the point was argued before the Prætor, and if he was not satisfied with the plaintiff's statement, or thought there was no real ground of action, he could refuse to allow the case to proceed further. If there were several forms applicable to the same subject, the plaintiff could choose which he liked, and until the Litis contestatio was completed he might alter the formula or amend it in any way he pleased, but after the Litis contestatio no alteration was permitted.

Power of amendment.

Gaius tells us how important it was to the plaintiff to prepare the formula accurately, and in the "Topica" Cicero points out the necessity of a lawyer being skilled in this branch of the technicalities of his profession¹.

Gaius, iv.
57.
Importance of the formula.

Cicero, Top. c. 17.

To the plaintiff's statement or declaration succeeded the defendant's answer, by exceptio, in which he made his statement, or recital of his plea in answer, for the purpose of having it introduced into the Formula. All these proceedings were oral, though there are proofs in the Vatican Fragments, and in some passages of the Digest, that the plaintiff's statement, the defendant's plea, and the Magistrate's interlocutory judgment, were sometimes drawn up in the form of written pleadings.

¹ In the ch. 28 of the "De Orator. Partitione" Cicero gives a very clear explanation of the technicalities of the Formulary Process.

Proceedings in Jure.

These preliminaries were matters cognizable only "in Jure" and before the Prætor, who then remitted them with the Formula to the Judex named by him, and thus threw them "in Judicio" into the form termed the "Litis Contestatio¹," which closed the technical proceedings. On the third day, "dies comperendinus," the parties were bound to appear before the Judex, who employed the interim in considering the evidence, or in taking the opinion of others on the merits of the case².

¹ So named, says Festus, because it was an ancient Roman custom for the plaintiff to call on some of the bystanders to be witnesses at it, i.e. antestari sc. contestari.

² A chapter in Aul. Gellius, xiv. 42, gives an amusing description of the difficulties he had in making up his mind on the merits of a case when sitting as Judex, and of his employing the intermediate days in taking advice of others how he ought to decide.

Probably it was at this time that the bail spoken of in a law of the XII. Tables (Vades Subvades) was given¹. This kind of bail however ceased with the Legis Actiones, except in one or two particular cases, such as those mentioned by Gaius. Com. iv. 88.
90. 96. 102.

When these preliminaries "in Jure" were adjusted, the suit was heard by a Judex, and became one "in Judicio." Then the first step was a brief statement of the matter in dispute, called the "causæ conjectio," or "causæ collectio," followed by a more detailed narrative of the facts. The evidence was introduced, not in any special form, or at any particular time, but in such mode as suited each party². Quintilian tells us that the selection and rejection of evidence was a business by which the skill of a Patronus was much tested. It was allowable either to produce the witnesses and interrogate them in Court, or put in their evidence by Proceedings in Judicio.

Gell. v. 10.
Gaius, iv.
15.

Quint.
Inst. Orat.
v. 7.

¹ See in Varro de Ling. Lat. v. 7, the distinction between Sponsor, Vas and Præs; Gellius, xvi. 10, mentions the Vades and the Subvades as antiquated terms in his day.

² For proof of this, cf. Cic. Pro Rosc. Com. 14, and Pro Quintio, 18 and 19, where the speeches of the advocate are interrupted to introduce his evidence.

D. 22. 3.
25. 3.

way of depositions taken on oath¹. But besides the direct and positive testimony of witnesses, other evidence was allowable, such as "documents," "common report," or "reputation;" and, in certain cases, such as e.g. questions relative to property² depending on a testamentary succession, answers extracted from slaves by torture. The Judex had full power to cause an oath to be administered to a witness where he deemed such a step necessary to complete a proof that without it was doubtful; and, from a passage in the Digest, it would appear that one of the parties might direct the Judex to cause an oath to be administered to his adversary. When the regular pleadings were over, each party could recapitulate the principal points in his case, pressing his opponent with questions and counterquestions, after which judgment was given¹. If, however, the Judex thought the matters in dispute had not been properly and clearly laid before him in the pleadings, he could adjourn the case (lis ampliata) for a second or third hearing; hence Cicero's expressions prima, secunda and tertia actio. If the defendant failed to appear when the case was called on, he was summoned three times, sometimes orally (denunciatione), sometimes by writing (literis), and sometimes by a public notice (edictis); after which he suffered judgment by default².

¹ Cic. Pro Rosc. Com. 14 and 15, and D. 22. 5. 3. 4, and Quint. v. 7. § 1 and 5. The permission to give evidence by depositions in civil suits was accorded by Justinian, C. 4. 20. 16 and 17.

² Paulus in his Sent. v. 15. § 6, says, "In re pecuniaria tormenta nisi cum de rebus hæreditariis quæritur non adhibentur."

Adjournment of case.

Pro Flacco, 20.
Pro Cæcina,
31.

¹ This, though generally a written one, was sometimes delivered viva voce. When written, after it had been read out it was inscribed on the tabella. Suet.—Claud. 15.

² Paul Sentent. v. 5 a. § 7.

CHAPTER VI.

The Alterations introduced by the Emperors.

MANY notable changes were made in course of time in the administration of justice, by which the position of the chief Magistrate became gradually much affected; for though the Consuls still retained something more than the mere shadow of a name, and the position of the Prætors was not very materially altered for some time, other officers had sprung up entrusted with a portion of the duties, that till then had belonged almost exclusively to the above-named dignitaries. Among these new officers, the Præfectus Urbis in Rome, and the Magistratus Municipalis in Italy and in the provinces, had certain duties, and a certain share of the Jurisdictio entrusted to them. The Præfectus Urbis was a Magistrate of considerable importance, sitting not only as a criminal Judge within the jurisdiction of the city, but presiding also in a court where certain matters were heard, some of which we should call misdemeanours, but which in the Roman jurisprudence were termed civil offences¹. From jealousy of the municipal towns the emperors had constantly reduced their privileges, among other reductions taking away from the Magistratus Municipalis as well cognizance in criminal proceedings, as in all matters the hearing of which depended upon the officer possessing the Imperium, limiting therefore the Municipalis Magistratus to the exercise of the Jurisdictio alone. But the most remarkable and noteworthy change was the elevation of the Emperor into the position of supreme Judge over every other officer, with power not only to decide on all matters brought before him, but to examine them either himself, or by any delegate he pleased, whether the Senate, some magistrate, or a private individual

The municipal towns stripped of their privileges.

Suet. Claud. 14. 15.
Suet. Nero, 15.
D. 49. 3. 3.

¹ See them set out in D. 1. 12. Among other things it is stated that permission was granted them to hear interdicts Quod vi aut clam, and Unde vi.

occupying for the nonce the position of a Judex.

Innovations on the old mode of proceeding.

Although in general the old mode of proceeding was observed as well at Rome in the courts of the Prætor and Præfectus urbis, as out of Rome in those of the Præsides and the Legati, viz. to open the business In jure and obtain a Judex, and so go on with it In judicio, still there were not infrequent innovations on this plan,—innovations introduced at the command of the emperors, with the object of shortening suits. These changes at first were confined to the proceedings heard by a Judex¹ named by the Emperor, but in a very short time were extended to the other courts.

Distinction between ordinary procedure and Extraordinariæ Cognitiones.

Hence began the distinction between the old forms or the ordinary procedure and the new or extraordinary Cognitiones, and it soon became a recognised rule that every cause should be taken as an Extraordinaria cognitio, when the principle involved in the plaintiff's statement was not recognised by the civil law or the Prætor's edict, and therefore had to be referred to the Emperor. The proper mode of proceeding then was for the magistrate to introduce the suit, not in the regular form as magistrate, but Extra ordinem as a delegated officer.

¹ So much was rapidity and despatch aimed at in these changes, that very often the Emperor only gave a Judex on condition that the parties should not appeal from his sentence; for by this time the power of appeal had been fully established.—D. 49. 1. 4.

These innovations must have been much approved, for ere long they soon spread, and became so important that a title of the Digest is devoted to their consideration, in which they are classified and arranged. What added to their value was the fact that they were disposed of at once without waiting for the regular *Conventus*¹, and unhampered by formulæ, or the necessity of naming a Judex. And soon what had been only an exceptional case, viz. that the direct decision of a Magistratus might in certain questions take the place of a reference to a Judex, became a general rule in

¹ A sort of perpetual "sittings after term."

Diocletian's reign, as better suited to a government careless of old notions, and to a people immersed in business and therefore impatient of delay in civil procedure.

Forms of action destroyed.

Hence all forms of action were swept away; there was no need of any formal summons being sued out on the plaintiff's part; the Prætor, if he pleased, could at once call on the parties to state the case, and decide it then and there, whilst not only the Prætor but all the other Judices and officers could hear and settle suits in the same free, unformal and rapid manner. The destruction of the Vadimonium took place in the reign of Marcus Aurelius, by the introduction of another form of summons, a simple Denunciatio Litis; but as this was, in its turn, considered to be too much productive of delay, in several actions permission was granted to omit it, and therefore before Justinian's time no more was heard of it in practice.

C. Th. II.
4. 2.

I shall now briefly state the mode in which a suit was tried under this new and more summary process; considering first the business before it came into court, and next the proceedings at the trial¹.

To commence a suit then, in a legal form, the plaintiff was required to prepare a short statement, signed by himself, of his cause of action, termed Libellus; this the magistrate directed an officer of the court (viator, executor) to serve on the defendant, with the addition of a summons either verbal or written. A period of twenty days was then allowed to elapse, before the defendant was bound to give in a written acknowledgment of the receipt of the summons, and a statement that he intended as well to defend the action as to be ready to appear; when he had either to give bail for his appearance at the proper time, or to take an oath or even make promise to the same effect: but if he gave bail, it was only for appearance, and, unlike the

Actions
under the Summary process.

¹ If the defendant kept out of the way to avoid a summons he was then called on three times, after which, on his non-appearance, or supposing he had given bail, on his refusing to go on, the suit was conducted without him, and if judgment went against him the plaintiff was put into possession of his goods, or of the object sought to be recovered if the action was in rem.

old form, no pledges were required for the payment of damages. If he could not give proper bail, and the necessity of such a step were insisted on, the viator was held to be responsible for his attendance under a penalty.

Litis Contestatio.

When all these steps were taken the cause was ready for hearing. On the appointed day the plaintiff stated his case at full length. If the defendant acknowledged that the plaintiff's demand was properly made, that was held equivalent to the old Confessio in Jure. But if he denied the justice of it, that was considered to be a sufficient issue, and the issue so joined was termed Litis Contestatio, having all the effects of the old form; then came Exceptiones, Replicationes, *Duplicationes*¹, &c., but no formula was necessary for their introduction, one consequence of which was, that no fatal objection could be made to any Exceptio on the ground of its being Dilatoria. All the pleadings were taken down in writing by certain officers appointed

Lydus de
Mag. III.
20. 27.

¹ Pleas, Replication, Rebutter.

for the purpose, named Epistolares and Officiales. The magistrate, or Judex, allowed the pleadings to extend to any length he deemed necessary to explain the point in dispute. One part of the business belonging to the Officiales was to assign to the parties the witnesses whom they thought to be proper ones, and these were sworn before their evidence was received. They were examined in the presence of the parties to the suit, and their examinations having been reduced into writing were delivered to the parties¹. When documents were offered in evidence, great care was taken to establish their genuineness. The Judge was bound to give a written decision, which was read in the rough draft (Periculo), after which it was entered in a Register of Judgments, where the Judge added his signature, and then a copy of it, together with the whole

C. Th. 11.
18. 1.

The Officiales, their duties.
C. 4. 20. 9.

The judgment how given.

¹ See C. 4. 21. 16 and 20, N. 49. 2, N. 73, on the subject of documentary evidence, which, as written instruments were now much resorted to, became a very important part of evidence; in order to obtain correctness, the preparation of these deeds and instruments was entrusted to Tabelliones having offices (stationes) in the different towns situated in public thoroughfares.—Nov. 44.

Lydus de
Mag. iii.
11.

pleadings, was delivered to the parties. In difficult questions, the Judge sent the case to the Emperor for his decision, together with a written statement of the whole transaction, as well as his recommendation to the parties, and their own opinions. The decision so referred to the Emperor was by his orders laid before a commission composed of the Quæstor of the palace and two other "personæ illustres."

C. Th. xi.
29; xi. 30.
Symm.
Epist. ii.
30; x. 39.
50.

c. 7. 62. 34.

Libellus Supplicationis.

Still another change took place in the history of these proceedings I am chronicling; by which permission was granted to a party to open his complaint to the Emperor himself by a Libellus Supplicationis, the effect of which was to put the matter on the same footing with a Litis Contestatio. The usual course was then for the Emperor to transmit the plaintiff to a Judex by a rescript drawn up by the Quæstor, and signed by himself¹. This rescript and the Libellus had then to be carried before the Judex, and hence a new technical form was introduced into Legal

Editio
rescripti.

¹ These Relationes were abolished by Justinian.—Nov. 125.

Procedure, that of Editio rescripti, possessing no advantage over the others.

Such then were the changes introduced into Complaints or Actions at Law; and if rapidity was gained by the later forms, honesty and the "incorrumpita fides" of the old Romans were lost. The magistrate was a creature of the Emperor, or of his favourites; the courts of justice were private places openly insulted by the presence of rich bribers; and the ancient unpaid *Judices*¹, who decided as Roman citizens for the welfare and honour of the city, were succeeded by a band of rapacious officers demanding and receiving Sportulæ, at first under the specious cover of fees for the registration of the pleadings and judgments, and for issuing summonses, but in process of time with the ostensible view of enriching

The evils of these last changes.

¹ Of the low condition and utter inefficiency of the Judices, Macrobius gives an example in the Saturn. ii. xii. as exhibited in a speech of C. Titius in advocating the Lex Fannia, who describes the Judex of his day as a drunken, gluttonous knave, whose only desire was to avoid all work, and who, when forced, "ad comitium vadere, ne litem suam faciat," was often so overcome with wine as scarcely to be able to raise his head up or keep his eyes open.

themselves at the expense of the parties. Long before the fall of the empire justice was an empty name, and the courts, in which it was supposed to preside, became the resort of all who strove to seize the wealth of others, by the corruption that was there openly permitted—

Heu Pietas! heu prisca fides!

CHAPTER VII.

Roman Law of Evidence.

AN account of the mode of Civil Procedure among the Romans would scarcely be complete without a slight sketch of two very important parts of all suits or actions at law, viz. the proofs, or the means by which the facts asserted on one side or the other are to be legally established; and the Right of Appeal, or that power which, in every complete system of law, is given to a dissatisfied suitor, to have the cause of his dissatisfaction with a decision investigated by a higher authority. I propose, therefore, in this chapter, to consider the manner in which proofs were introduced in the trial of a Roman action at law; and to throw into a brief narrative the principal rules by which the examination of witnesses was conducted, and the validity of documentary evidence was established.

The sources of the Roman Law of Evidence, it must be acknowledged, are the Sources

of the Law of Evidence.

least satisfactory portion of that great mass of common sense and valuable legal information, the Corpus Juris Civilis, not so much on account of their meagreness, and certainly not because of the inferiority of the rules of evidence contained therein, in plain practical wisdom, to any other portion of their law, as by reason of the difficulty of collecting them out of the various pages of the Digest, Code and Novels in which they lie scattered. Ostensibly, five titles of these works are devoted to the subject of proofs, the 3rd, 4th and 5th titles of the 22nd Book of the Digest; the 19th title of the 5th Book of the Code, and a portion of the 90th Novel. But a diligent investigation of these titles in the pages of one of those old and valuable commentators, Gothofred or Cujas, to whom the painful labour of illustrating by parallel passages was a labour of love, will bring to light a multitude of references which, if collected, would form a respectable Treatise on Evidence. A careful perusal too of the Roman maxims on this subject will impress on the reader the conviction that the intention of the Roman lawyers was to facilitate to the utmost the admission of evidence, rather than to attempt in any way, by too narrowly sifting it, to favour its exclusion.

It was not till the preliminaries had been settled Evidence when taken. In jure, and the Litis Contestatio was completed, that the evidence in the case was produced; this was done always before the Judex, to whom alone could be referred the question of its admissibility, and who, far from being tied down by any narrowing rules or formulæ, had full discretion given him to judge of the credibility due to each witness, and to estimate D. 22. 5. 3. 4. the value of the evidence laid before him.

The matter then in dispute being resolved into such an issue as could be laid before the Judex, it was necessary for the parties to the cause to convince him of the truth of the facts stated by them. How Never given to the Judex in this part of a Cause. important and trustworthy the office of the Judex in its best days in the conduct of the cause was, may be judged of from that freedom of action which he possessed.

C. 4. 20. 19. Thus it was the business of these officers to see that the witnesses were forthcoming at the proper time to give their evidence, and that one or other of the parties was then present in court; it was their duty to take down the evidence in their secretum or court; to judge of the merits of the persons so produced, and to decide whether they came within the class of legal witnesses; to issue the writs of summons themselves; to see that all the regulations in force were observed, which forbade the summoning of persons from a long distance, and from one Civitas to another, unless the custom of the province permitted it; and to inflict punishment on those who gave false testimony.

D. 22. 5. 3. § 6.

The subject I am now handling may be considered under three heads: first, the question of the Onus probandi, i. e. on whom, according to the Roman law, the burden of proof was cast; secondly, the different kinds of evidence in use at Rome; and, thirdly, who might be witnesses, and how many were required.

First, then, as regards the burden of proof: the general rule of the Roman Law, not peculiar to the classical Jurisconsults and the imperial code, but in vogue even in the early Formulary era, was that the Onus probandi lay on him who made an assertion or allegation, not on him who denied one; a rule which has been extended to the Jurisprudence of our own days, and from which, maintaining as it does in general terms, that the demandant of a thing or right is bound to establish the reasons of his demand, the deduction may be drawn that the failure of him on whom the onus is thus cast to establish his reasons, is equivalent to a failure of his cause of action itself. D. 5. 1. 62.
D. 40. 12. 7.
§ 5.

The theory of such a principle springing from a Jurisprudence which has thus settled its general application in a regular formula admits, of course, of variation, in so far as its particular application is concerned; and in the Roman law this Onus probandi was not put forward as an absolute condition precedent tied down by any strict or rigorous forms: the plaintiff first introduced all the facts that were necessary to support his claim, or that could in his judgment weaken his adversary's means of defence, who immediately made his attack upon this statement, to which the plaintiff replied, and so they went on till the Judex thought that a sufficient issue was raised. By pressing his adversary in this way, under the expectation that the Judex would refuse any more dilatory pleadings, the plaintiff might at last cause him to lose his right of producing proofs; and when these oral pleadings were thus brought to a stop by the Judex, then the matter rested with him to decide on whom should be cast the burden of proof.

Fourfold division of the rules of the subject of the Onus Probandi.

The rules of the Roman Law on the subject of the Onus probandi may be conveniently classified under the four following heads: first, as a general principle, the burden of proof lay on him who affirmed, not on him who denied, a rule that was applicable to both parties, for if, e. g. the question in a suit involving the right of succession to property was, whether A. B.

belonged to such or such a Familia, the burden of proof was cast upon him who asserted the fact, no matter whether plaintiff or defendant; so too where infancy was pleaded as a defence to an action, the Onus probandi here was on the defendant, whilst on the other hand, if the condition of infancy was a ground of action, and as such asserted by the plaintiff, it was his duty to prove this assertion. On this subject there is no lack of authorities in the Digest and Code ; the three following examples, however, will illustrate the extent of the rule better than any other. In an action Pecuniæ numeratæ (or of money lent by way of Mutuum), as the plaintiff set up a debt as his cause of action, it was for him to prove its existence ; but if the defendant pleaded payment, then the Onus probandi was cast upon him. Again, in an action to obtain possession, whether of lands or goods, the Onus probandi, as to the title, was upon him who laid claim to the goods, and the possessor of the things claimed was not bound to shew, in the first instance, that they were Illustrations of this rule as to the Onus probandi.

C. 4. 19. 1.

C. 4. 19. 2.

C. 4. 21. 5. his¹. So too, in any action, in which one C. 4. 21. 13. of the parties asserted an accidental loss of documents, necessary to the case, he was bound to prove the fact of the loss, and of its being accidental. The second of these Second rule. rules on the subject of the Onus probandi is, that generally the burden of proof was cast upon the plaintiff, assuming that he asserted his right to a thing, or advanced some claim; but not so, if he commenced the suit by a denial, whether express, or implied of another's rights, for "per rerum naturam, factum ne- C. 4. 19. 23. *gantis probatio nulla est*²." The third rule, ¹ See Roscoe on Evidence, 7th edition, pp. 434, 435.

Proof in Actiones
negatoriae.

² The question of proof in the Actiones negatoriae is involved in considerable difficulty. Some writers maintain that where a proprietor refused to recognise the service or easement claimed, the proof of its actual existence was cast on the opposite party (the claimant), on the ground that, as property in the soil is a free gift in the hands of God, he who seeks to interfere with another's rights by such a dismemberment as that of a service, ought in fairness to prove the possession of the right. The text of the Roman Law, however, by no means supports this view. Theophilus, in his Paraphrase, explains the Actio negatoria to be really an Actio confessoria, that is, one in which an assertion is put forward, that the property has never been burdened with a service,—in confirmation of which, a passage from the Digest (39. 1. 15) may be cited, where Africanus the lawyer puts the case of a man who, claiming the right Altius tollendi, commences an Actio confessoria to establish the claim, to which the which is simply a consequence of the limitation of the first, is, that whereas by some Exceptiones (pleas) the defendant became as it were plaintiff, he was compelled to prove his Exceptio; as, e.g. if he pleaded an agreement, or payment. The fourth is, that where the plaintiff and defendant merely made contradictory assertions, then the Onus probandi lay on the plaintiff; as when a legatee sought to recover from the heir a legacy, which the latter asserted had been lent, or given to another person by the testator in his lifetime, the fact of such loan or conveyance by the testator would have to be proved by the plaintiff (the legatee). I go on now to the second of the three divisions, into which, for convenience' sake, I have arranged the matter of this Chapter,—the different kinds of legal evidence which were Third rule.

D. 22. 3.
19. 3.
Fourth rule.

The second division—the different kinds of Legal Evidence.

defendant enters no appearance. The claimant then becomes a Quasi possessor juris; and to prevent him from carrying out his intention Altius tollendi, the owner of the property about to be invaded must, as a punishment for his laches in not pleading to the first action, commence an Actio negatoria, to oppose the attempt and "jure suo probare necesse habet;" that is, the burden of proof is cast upon him, although he is the plaintiff in a negatory action.—See Fresquet, Traité du droit Romain, T. II. p. 378.

Presumptive Evidence.

permitted in Rome. Strictly speaking proofs were made up of oral and written testimony—the evidence of witnesses and the evidence of documents—but there was another set of means by which the existence of facts might be inferred, viz. Presumptions; these had great weight with the Roman lawyers, by whom they have been carefully analysed and distinguished. It is unnecessary to do more than glance at the leading features of this branch of their law of evidence, and, in pointing out the threefold distinction of presumptions, viz. *Juris et de Jure*¹, *Juris tantum*², and *Facti*³, I shall dwell only upon the Presumptiones juris; for the Presumptiones facti may be summarily dismissed, inasmuch as no positive rules were laid down by the Roman lawyers for their admission or application: the weight that was to be attached to them was left entirely to the Judex, on whose logical acumen and practical sagacity depended the effect they might have in the case. But, as the subject of the Presump-tiones juris has been discussed at some length in the third Title of the 22nd Book of the Digest, one or two illustrations of the mode in which they were applied will explain the effect they produced. In the first place, they were rebuttable only by clear proof of some fact, or act, directly at variance with them; where, therefore, an individual did any act, which the law permitted to be done, the legal presumption was, that he had a right to do it, and his opponent was not allowed merely to assert the existence of some law or constitution restraining D. 22. 3. 5. him from the act, but was put to strict proof of the law and its consequences ere the Presumptio could be rebutted. So too, as it was a Presumptio juris, that every act was C. 4. 19. 11. legally done, until the contrary was proved, where an attempt was made to avoid a will, on the ground of its being informally drawn up, the opponent was bound to make strict proof of all its defects. Again, on the Presumptio juris that he who did an act intended to take on himself all the legal consequences of the act, where an individual entered into any agreement, or contract (without limiting its purport), the contract was presumed to be a real not a personal one, and was held to be binding on the heirs. So also, where a creditor gave a cancelled chirograph to his debtor, he was presumed to have discharged the debt also, in the absence of proof of his expressed intention to the contrary. In the second place, when these presumptions were not rebutted by contrary evidence, then “pro veritate habebantur,” they were held to be intendments made by the law, and as such were admitted to be good and complete evidence in every cause.

¹ Irrebuttable and conclusive; i.e. inferences made by the law of so high a nature, as not to be overturned by any contrary proof, however strong.

² Rebuttable and inconclusive; i.e. intendments made by law, holding good until disproved.

³ Quite inconclusive of themselves, and depending for any degree of credit that may attach to them on corroborative facts.

I need not, however, dwell at any further length on this topic, because I have no intention to make a treatise upon the law of evidence; and because the subject of presumptions has been discussed so logically and so ably by Mr Best, in his admirable work on the Law of Evidence, that it will be sufficient for me to refer my readers to that book.

Best on the Law of Evidence,
2nd edit.
pp. 365 388.

I pass on then to the more direct proofs resorted to before a Judex, and commence with the subject of documentary evidence, of which there were two kinds, public and private, differing materially, with respect to the authority and weight attaching to them. The former class may be considered under two heads: the first embracing those that were in their very nature public, as public registers, public monuments, the registers of the census, &c.; the second comprising such as were not ipso facto public, but became so by the operation of the Law, or confirmation of some proper authority, as, for instance, the documents specified in a passage of the Code, which, although really of a private nature, are there placed by the Emperor on the footing of public documents, and, as such, admitted as evidence in certain forms of action, where, if private, they would have been excluded¹.

Documentary evidence.

Public.

D. 22. 3. 10.

C. 8. 18. 11.

¹ Instruments drawn up by a Tabellio were quasi public; but to make them good evidence they required certain formalities.—Nov. 47, c. 1.

Private. To the class of private documents every other writing was referred, such as chirographs, receipts, acceptances, letters, household notes, accounts, &c. The value and authority of each of these two classes, as I stated above, differed widely in the Roman prove themselves; Law of Evidence. For public documents were considered of so high a nature, that not only did they prove themselves¹, but greater weight was attached to them than was given to any other species of evidence,

Public

D. 22. 3. 10. whether oral or written. On the other not so private. hand, private instruments were never admissible, if they were not properly subscribed and witnessed, i. e. by three witnesses, unless the party, against whom they were produced, acknowledged the document to be in his handwriting; whilst all mere written declarations of third parties, informal documents, or private assertions, were summarily rejected, a full discretion however being left to the Judex to decide upon the reception of the documents offered in evidence, and to attach what value he pleased to them when received. The old ante-Justinianean regulations had permitted the comparison of the document produced in court, with that of other writings acknowledged to be the parties', for the purpose of proving the handwriting; but that custom was removed by special authority in Justinian's reign, on the ground of the opportunity it gave for fraud, and no comparison of handwriting was allowed, save in the case of documents witnessed in the proper legal form.

¹ Of course due care was taken by the Judex to satisfy himself that they were produced from the proper custody.

Comparison of handwriting.

C. 4. 21. 20.

The rules of the Roman Law, on the subject of the production of documents, are founded in the main on principles of common sense, and have been introduced into the practice of later times, and other systems of Jurisprudence; a brief summary of these regulations will be sufficient for my purpose. I stated in a former chapter, that, as an invariable rule, the Plaintiff was bound Edere actionem, that is, to declare to the defendant what species of action he intended to apply for to the Prætor, in order that the Production of documents.

other party might not be taken by surprise in his pleadings. In addition however to the Editio actionis, an Editio instrumentorum was also enjoined upon the plaintiff, who was compelled in consequence to state, for the information of the Judex, all the documentary evidence which he meant to rely upon, that the defendant might know how to shape his own case¹.

The defendant stood in a better position, as regards the Editio, than the plaintiff, inasmuch as he was not bound to produce any instruments against himself, on the principle, that "Actore non probante, reum, etsi nihil ipse præstet, obtinere." This privilege was specially observed in criminal proceedings, for there the doctrine of the Roman Law was, that the prosecutor, on grounds as well legal as equitable, ought not to prove his charge by documents not belonging to himself. Nor was the defendant obliged to exhibit any other instruments than those which bore upon the case, unless the Fiscus was plaintiff, when the defendant could not avail himself of these privileges¹.

¹ But here the plaintiff was not obliged to produce any other documents than those he intended to make use of, save his book of accounts (rationes), for an order of the Emperor Alexander had insisted on their production at all events.

All instruments were required to be exhibited whole, and therefore where only a portion of any document, as, for instance, a written agreement, was produced, no notice was taken of it: any omission of the day and year when the instrument was reduced to writing, was of no consequence; but an omission of the day when payment was to be made, was a fatal objection: a strict attention to all these points was exacted in the case of bills and receipts, for in these it was held, that the day and year formed a necessary part. There was, however, a class of persons, occupying a peculiar position in Rome, who were subjected to a particular set of regulations in the matter now under consideration; these were the Argentarii, or money-lenders, who were obliged to produce their books of account,

Omissions in instruments.

Rule as to Argentarii.

¹ It should be noticed that these privileges applied only to private, not to public documents; for the Judex had power to command their production at the request of either party.

properly dated, not only when they were plaintiffs or defendants, but even when they were not parties to the suit.

Not to dwell at any further length on this portion of my work, there are one or two points which may be noticed, ere I proceed to the more important topic of oral evidence. To what has been above stated on the subject of the production of documents I shall only add, that no particular form was required for their production, and that, when once they were admitted by the Judex, no cross examination upon them was allowed with the view of damaging their credit. If documents were lost, the loss might be supplied, and evidence of their contents given by such means as the Judex approved of; whilst if the lost document was a receipt for money paid to the Treasury, a copy of the entry in the Treasury books was admitted to supply the loss. In the absence of original documents copies were allowed, save when the Fiscus was plaintiff. As a general rule, the depositions of witnesses

No form required for production of documents.

Loss, how remedied.

C. 4. 21. 1.

Copies.

and the evidence afforded by written instruments were of equal value; but in questions of ancient reputation, more credit was given to written, than to oral evidence. D. 22. 3. 10. Lastly, except in some few cases Writing, how far necessary. (such, e.g. as the class of literal contracts), writing was not an essential requisite; for if the Res gesta had not been reduced to writing, the proof of its completeness might be established, and the act would be considered valid, even without a note in writing. D. 22. 4. 5.

From the consideration of documentary Oral evidence. evidence I proceed to that of oral. This part of my subject I shall distribute under three heads, and shall explain, first, who might be witnesses; secondly, how many witnesses were necessary in every cause; and thirdly, how the evidence of witnesses was taken.

As a general rule, all were deemed competent to give evidence who were not labouring under any incapacity, whether absolute or relative; and in the list of those incompetent on the ground of absolute incapacity, were placed, first, Infants, Proximi Competency of witnesses. D. 22. 5. 20.

infantiæ, and in criminal cases all under twenty years of age; secondly, Madmen; C. 9. 41. 1. thirdly, Slaves, whose evidence was re-D. 22. 57. ceived, only after they had been submitted
D. 22. 5. 3. 5. to torture; and lastly, Personæ infames, D. 22. 5. 13. those whose infamy arose from a judicial
D. 22. 5. 21. decision, or in consequence of their callings¹.

Competency.

The objection to such witnesses as came under the second head, that of relative incapacity, was founded on equitable grounds. Hence we find among those whose testimony was excluded on this account, every person who had any direct interest in the cause, whether parties to the suit, or not²; all accomplices in any offence; fathers and sons attempting to give evidence one for the other; every one subject to the orders of the summoning party, or attached to the household of a prosecutor in a Judicium publicum; and lastly, on the ground of

¹ The evidence of women was admitted, save of such as had been disabled by the Lex Julia de Adulteriis on the ground of adultery. Prodigi or notorious spendthrifts were classed as Furiosi or madmen.

² For "nullus idoneus testis in re sua intelligitur."

Inimicitia capitalis, all who were known to be about to commence criminal proceedings Nov. 90. 7. against the opposite party. But in addition to thus distinguishing the cases, in which the evidence of certain individuals was to be rejected, the Roman Law was equally particular in imposing directions on the Judex, Directions to Judex as to taking evidence. as to the mode of taking the evidence, as to the manner of judging the credibility of the witnesses, and as to the degree of importance to be attached to the quality, rather than to the quantity of oral proof. Briefly to dismiss this last direction, it is Quantity of evidence. C. 4. 20. 9. enough to state, that, as a general rule, two witnesses sufficed in each cause (for one alone would not do¹). At the same time, the Judex was expressly enjoined not to be influenced so much by the number, as by the “dignitas et auctoritas testium,” D. 22. 5. 3. 2. and while more weight was naturally attached to the testimony of eye-witnesses, yet hearsay evidence was not altogether to be rejected, provided the parties, who gave such hearsay evidence¹, stated it from their own knowledge, and not from the mere relation of third persons. While full power was thus entrusted to the Judex to decide upon the merits of the case by the quality of the evidence brought to bear upon it, no less discretion was given him to judge of the credit due to each witness; "verumtamen," says Papinian, "quod legibus omissum est, non omittetur religione judicantium," for it is their duty to test the integrity of the witnesses, and to be influenced by the statement of men of worth and character. Nor was he left entirely to himself, unassisted by any directions of the law. He was directed to look to the following points: first, the condition of the witnesses' life; secondly, their general character and reputation; thirdly, their social

¹ In this point a change had taken place since the days of the classical juriconsults, at which time the rule “testis unus testis nullus” did not prevail. Of course in all those transactions where a certain number of witnesses was required by law, as in Wills, Codicils, Divorce, &c., the full number had to be produced.

D. 22.3.28. Directions to Judex.

Pothier, Pand. xxii. v. § 15.

Ib. xxii. v. § 16.

¹ But it should be noticed that such admission of hearsay evidence is spoken of with reference to rights of service or easements referred to an arbiter, and does not seem to be a generally received notion.

position; and fourthly, their demeanour in the cause: and as he alone had the power of summoning them, the parties would not only have to inform him how many and what witnesses they intended to call, but would have to abide his decision, formed after a previous examination of the witnesses, whether they were to be allowed to appear or not¹. Having settled these preliminaries then, the parties were prepared with their oral proofs; and of the mode of taking the evidence I shall now speak, Travelling expenses. first premising that in all cases, whether civil or criminal, the witnesses were entitled C. 4. 20. 11. C. 7. 62. 6. 2. not only to their full travelling expenses, but also to such further allowances as the Judex should deem necessary to support them while waiting for the hearing of the cause.

In every case the Judex was bound to Oral proofs taken by Judex. examine the witnesses himself, and not to rest contented with the production of depositions, or affidavits,—“testibus, non testimoniis crediturum,” says Hadrian; nor does it appear that the terms of this direction were relaxed, even where witnesses had in the interim died, on the express ground of the danger arising from fraudulent malpractices: though by later regulations, in case of unavoidable and necessary absence, the Judex had the power of issuing a commission to the attorneys of the parties, for the purpose of taking on oath the evidence of such absentees¹.

¹ It should be noticed here that the Roman lawyers did not recognise the introduction of experts and skilled witnesses as a formal part of legal evidence, though the Judex could, if he pleased, summon them to aid him in any question of difficulty.

Examination how conducted:

We have arrived then at the stage when the witnesses were ready to be examined; and here the important question arises, how was that examination conducted? was it a secret one, and were the parties allowed to be present? It is a notion prevalent among many persons, that the Roman

C. 4. 20. 19. ¹ The term of fifteen days was allowed by the law for keeping the witnesses waiting. When that had expired they were permitted to return home, without fear of any process to compel further appearance. If the delay in hearing the cause was imputable to the Judex, the extra expense caused by the detention of the witnesses was thrown upon him as a punishment.

system of jurisprudence was not only favourable to, but actually enjoined secret examinations; and some commentators have gone so far as to assert, that the parties themselves to the cause were excluded at such time. The general tenor however of the Roman Law, as exhibited in the Digest and Code, especially in those parts that treat of the examination of witnesses, is adverse to that view; and the ancient forms of proceeding shew so undoubtedly the existence of public examinations, as an established custom, that a change of this sort would have been one of a very revolutionary kind. The error may be traced to the use of the term secreto in the Code, where directions are given to conduct the examinations In secreto. This Secretum, or Secretarium, was simply the chamber where, in the Imperial days, the Judices sat to hear Causes; and as in olden times the Courts were open and uncovered, the word was coined to distinguish the locality, as covered in and separated from the outer regions. So far, however, from there being not a secret one.

'In secreto' explained.
C. 4. 20. 14.

any attempt at private examinations, it will be seen, from the instructions given to the Judices, not only that both parties were present, but that they could, either by themselves, or their advocates, cross-examine the witnesses opposed to them¹.

Examination 'in secreto' how conducted.

When therefore the parties to the suit and the witnesses were in the Secretum, it was necessary for him who produced the witnesses (or his advocate), to exhibit articles, explaining how he purposed to shape the examination, and then, before the examination commenced, his witnesses were sworn. When that was done, and the examination in chief had been gone through, the defendant was called upon to hand in a paper of counter-propositions, in order that the Judex might see the precise points to be proved. Then followed the Reprobatio, or objections made to the witnesses with the view of damaging their credit, by cross-examinations, counter-statements, or

C. 4. 20. 9.

D. 3. 2. 21.

¹ See Brissonius under the word Secretum, Huberi Prælectiones, iii. 1150; Gerard Noodt, Vol. II. p. 481; and Heineccii Antiquitates (Muhlenbrüch's edit.), 740.

contradicting evidence. It would appear from a passage in the Novels, that the N. 90, c. 4. plaintiff and defendant were not restricted to a single summons of witnesses. Each if he pleased had three opportunities for producing them within short intervals, and when all these Productiones testium were completed, the Judex had to form his judgment from the whole of the evidence laid before him; when, to use the words of Arcadius, "Credendum est, quod naturæ D. 22. 5. negotii convenit, confirmabitque judex mo- 21. 3. tum animi sui ex argumentis et testimoniis, quæ rei aptiora et vero proximiora esse comperit."

CHAPTER VIII.

The Power of Appeal.

I now proceed to consider the subject reserved for this last Chapter, viz. the Power of Appeal, its origin and development.

Appeal in the early period of Roman History.

In the early days of Rome we shall find very slight traces of such a principle in the jurisprudence of the country ; for though in later times its value, as a means of sifting the merits of a judicial decision, was fully recognised by the Roman lawyers, yet it was not till the complete settlement of the imperial authority that the power of Appeal from the decision of an inferior to a superior magistrate in civil suits was called into existence, or formed part of the regulations relating to proceedings by Action at Law.

Provocatio and Interventio.

For a long while the notion of Appeal was confined to a Provocatio from the unjust sentence of a consul, either to his colleague, whose sole remedy was an Interventio, or to the people at large, and this only in case of Publica Judicia; that is, of weighty crimes and offences.

Abundant examples of these Provocationes may be seen in the pages of the classical writers. Thus Livy, in recounting the story of Fabius, condemned by the dictator Papirius for an act of military insubordination, tells how his father appealed to the tribunes and to the people, in the words "Tribunos plebis appello, et provoco ad populum;" and in the case of Appius, distrust-Examples of the Provocatio :
VIII. c. 33.
III. 56.

So, too, in the pages of Cicero, Cæsar, Valerius Maximus, and Aulus Gellius, we have proof clear and sufficient that in every stage of judicial proceedings before the Prætor, from the Formula to the Executio, the intervention of the other Prætor, of the Consuls, or the Tribunes, could be demanded as of right. Still at the Pro Tullio, 38.
Pro Quintio, 7. 20, 21.
In Verr. II. 1, 46.
Cæsar de Bello Civili, III. 20.
Val. Max. VII. 7, § 6.
Gell. VII. 19.

period spoken of by these writers (that is, the Republican era), the effect of such intervention was not to produce a rehearing of the matter, but simply to put a stop, at once and for ever, to the judgment so appealed against.

In the Imperial times.

The accession of Augustus to power had introduced an important change in most of the old Roman institutions. He was soon invested with an authority far more absolute than any that had hitherto fallen to the lot of a Roman; and among other things had acquired the dignity of Consul, in addition to that of Censor and Tribune. One consequence of the possession of this latter office was, that he obtained not only the full right of interfering with every act of all the Magistrates in the State, but also the Provocatio from all judicial decisions. Hence in process of time the increasing influence of the throne, and the erection of other magistracies gave a new form to this Provocatio or intervention, so as to adapt it more thoroughly to the principles of the imperial Constitution; and out of the simple notion of the Provocatio and Interventio grew the more complex institution of the Appeal, properly so called. The principal features of this new institution I shall now briefly notice. At Rome itself the appeal lay from the Prætor to the Præfectus Urbi; in Italy, from the municipal magistrates to the Prætor, or the Præses; in the Provinces, to the Legati and the governors, and from them to the Proconsul. In very many instances appeals were permitted to be made to the Senate and to the Emperor¹, whilst the decision of a Judex datus was sent for revision to the magistrate by whom he had been appointed. In the reign of Constantine various important modifications were introduced into this branch of the Roman law of procedure.

The Provocatio changed,

and made a new institution.

D. 4. 4. 38.

D. 39. 2. 1.
D. 39. 2. 4.
3 & 4.

D. 49. 3. 3.

Mode of appealing.

D. 49. 1. 2.

In proceeding with an appeal all that was necessary was for the dissatisfied party, in court, and immediately after the judgment (apud acta), to call out, Appello; or, if he allowed a day or two to elapse, to prefer a written notice (*libellus*¹) of his intention to appeal, whereupon the Judex was bound to furnish the appellant with a statement, in writing, termed Literæ dimissoriæ, to the effect that he had duly received and lodged his appeal, and then a copy of the record was added to it. These documents were, after a delay, fixed within certain prescribed limits, to be forwarded to the higher tribunal. If the appeal was addressed to the Emperor, a somewhat more formal process was required; for the judge himself, whose sentence was appealed from, had to prepare a detailed statement, in writing (relatio or *consultatio*²), of the matter, and this was sent to the parties for their approval, then transmitted by messengers to the office of the imperial cancellarii, and thence forwarded to the Auditorium (imperial privy council), there to be heard and settled. Such was the process in use up to the time of Theodosius II.

¹ See an important case cited D. 12. 1. 40.

Cod. Th. 11.
30. 63.
11. 31. 3.

C. 1. 14. 2.

Change in the reign of Theodosius
II.

¹ In this libellus it was necessary to state the names of the appellant and the opposite party, and the purport of the judgment appealed against.

² See several of these Relationes given at full length in Symmachus, Ep. x. 48. 52. 53.

dosius II.; in his reign another change was made, by which appeals were directed to be heard before a permanent commission, composed of the Prefect, Prætor, and Quæstor, so as to avoid the troublesome forms above specified; "ne nostris occupationibus," to use the emperor's words, "aliena defraudari C. 7. 62. 32. commoda videantur." From that time the form of drawing up a Consultatio was done away with, save in the case of judgments delivered by the highest functionaries in the empire. With respect to the number of appeals permitted by the law in the same matter, that would appear to depend on the position and degree of the judge, whose judgment was objected to. In Justinian's time no person could make more than two appeals; but where the matter had been referred to the emperor at once, or had been argued before a Præfectus Prætorio, no farther hearing was allowed. Where appeals were dismissed as being groundless, or as founded on error, a fine was imposed on the appellant, who was always obliged to deposit a sum as security for his costs or fine—an opportunity of levying heavy tolls on unfortunate suitors, which was not thrown away in the days of imperial corruption and Roman decay¹.

¹ An indirect mode of appeal from the decision of the Præfectus Prætorio was permitted about 200 years before Justinian's reign, by means of what were called Supplicationes, or Retractationes; and a mode of paralysing judgments was also in use by considering them null and void, on the score of informality, a process somewhat in analogy with the ancient Revocatio in duplum.

C. 1. 19. 5.
C. 7. 62.
35.
D. 29. 8.
1. 2. & 3.
Pauli Sententiae, V.
5 a.

INDEX.

- Absentees, their evidence how taken, 130
Accidental loss of documents how proved, 114
Actio, its objects limited, 71 contrasted with Interdicta, 53 Communi dividundo, 75
 Familiæ herciscundæ, 75
 Finium regundorum, 75 in Personam and in Rem, 73, 74, 87 n.
Action, definition of Roman and English, 4, 5 forms of swept away, 100 Actiones, arbitrariæ, 76, 81, 82
 classified, 83
 Bonæ fidei, 76, 80, 81
 Confessoriæ, 114 n.
 Directæ and Utiles, 45, 46
 In jus and In factum, 46, 69
 Legis characterized, 5, 7 their disadvantages, 18, 21 enumerated, 11 n.
 referred to by Cicero, 25
 Negatoriæ, evidence in, 114 n.
 Stricti Juris, 76, 79, 81
 Utiles. their influence on the rules of Pleading, 47
Adjudicatio, 27 n.
Ælius, Sextus, 24
Ager Publicus, 49, 50
Alexandria, 61 n.
Ancient reputation, 125
Appeal, none from decision of Judex, 13 its history and changes, 134—140
Appearance, bail for, 101
Apud acta, 137
Arbiter and Arbitri, 63, 65, 69 esto, 25
 in equitable causes, 77
Arbitria and Judicia, 70 honoraria mentioned by Cicero, 25 Arbitrium, 32 distinguished from the 'Arbitraria formula,' 83
Auditoria, 63
Auditorium, last resort in Appeals, 138
Augustus, his great power, 136 is made Censor, Tribune, and Consul, 136 obtains the Provocatio, 136
Bail for appearance, 101
Best's 'Treatise on the Law of Evidence' cited, 118
Bills and receipts, omissions in, 123 Bona fides, meaning of the term, 78 opposed to the Strictum Jus, 79
Bonæ fidei, actiones, 76, 80, 81
Bonitarium, Jus, 10
Cancellarii, 138
Causæ cognitio, 85, 90
Centumviri, 25, 62, 66—69 representatives of the Roman people, 68 decided on questions of law, 67, 68 on questions of Quiritarian ownership, 67 Centumviral Courts, their importance, 68
Cneius Flavius, 21 n.
Cognoscebat, its meaning, 34
Commission to hear reserved cases, 104
Competence of witnesses, 125
Condere legem, 43
Condemnatio, 27 n. 45
Condictio, 11 n. 19—25
 Certi and incerti, 80
Consuls, 37 and note
Consultatio, 138, 139
Conventus, 85 and note
Contracts, peculiarities of as a Roman legal system, 10
Copies, when evidence, 124
Court-days, 85
Decemviral law quoted, 85
Decemviri litibus judicandis, 25

- Decreta, 55
 Decretum, 38 n.
 Decuriæ judicum, 64
 Demonstratio, 27 n. 45
 Denunciatio, 95
 litis, 100
 Depositions of witnesses, 125
 Dies comperendinus, 92
 Dies feriati, 84 n.
 Dimissoriæ literæ, 138
 Dismissal of appeal, 139
 Division of actions, motives for, 72
 Documentary evidence, 119 Documents, private and public, 120 quasi-public, 119 n.
 lost, how supplied, 124 rules as to production of, 121 Duplum, revocatio in, 140 n.
- Edictum perpetuum, 43
 Editio, actionis, 90—121 instrumentorum, 122
 rescripti, 105
 Egypt, a province, 61 n.
 Emperors, their judicial powers, 97 direct appeals to, more formal, 138
 Epistolares, 103
 Equitable courts, Roman and English, 41 Evidence, rules of, 107 its sources, 108
 when to be taken, 109 in taking, directions to Judex, 127 documentary, 119 hearsay, 128 and note oral, 125—133
 of experts, how far recognised, 129 n.
 Examination in court, not secret, 130, 131
 Exceptio pecuniæ numeratæ, 113
 Ex fide bona, meaning of formula, 77
 Expense of detaining witnesses, 130 n.
 Expenses, what allowed to witnesses, 129
 Experts, evidence of, 129 n.
 Extraordinariæ cognitiones, 32, 33 extension of in later times, 99
- Familiæ heriscundæ actio, 75
 Finium regundorum actio, ib.
- Fiscus, its privilege when plaintiff, 123
 Forms of action swept away, 100
 Formula, its importance, 91
 Formulæ, in factum, and in jus conceptæ, 46
 ut inter bonos bene agier ex fide bona, and quid æquius melius, explained, 77
 Formulary system, 5, 27, 30 its introduction explained by Gaius, 5 written pleadings introduced by, 6
 Gaius, formulary system explained by, 5
 Handwriting, comparison of, 121
 Heffter's explanation of the Lex Æbutia, 25
 Hortensia lex, 84
- Imperium, explained and classified, 37, 38 n.
 Inimicitia capitalis, 127
 In judicio and in jure, distinguished, 13, 92, 93
 Instrumentorum editio, 122 Instruments, private, public, and quasi-public, 119 n. and 120 omissions in, how supplied, 123
 Intentio, 11, 45
 Interdicts, 47—57
 Interventio, examples of in the classical writers, 135 its effect on the immediate business, 136
- Judex, 6, 11, 13
 and Arbiter contrasted, 62 n.
 assisted by Jureconsults, 14
 Cicero's regrets at the destruction of the office, 15 n.
 credit due to witnesses left to him, 128, 129
 datus, 137
 directions to, how to take evidence, 127
 'Esto,' meaning of the formula, 63
 litem suam facit, 11, 32 nature of his position, 64 negligence in him, how punished, 14 witnesses examined by, 129

- Judices, 62, 64, 65
 how far able to decide questions of law, 65 n.
 Pedanei, 69
 their inefficiency in later times, 105 n.
 their judgments distinguished from those of the Arbitri, 65
Judicia and Arbitria, 76
 Extraordinaria, 6
 Honoraria and Legitima, 76
 Legitima, non Legitima, and Privata, 25, 65, 66
Judicis datio, 11 n. 27 n.
 postulatio, 11 n. 25, 62
Jura ad rem and in re, 3, 73
Jurisdictio, 38 n. 43 transferred to the Prætors, 38
Jus edicendi explained, 59
 Prætorium, its origin, 42
Kings of Rome, their authority in early times, 37
Laferrière cited, 65 n.
Latitavit, 89 n.
Law-suits, how commenced under the summary process, 101
Legacy, in action to recover, what evidence necessary, 115
Leges Juliae, 26
Lex Æbutia, 24, 25, 44
 Cornelia, 42
 Hortensia, 84
 Rubria, 29
Libellus explained, 34, 101 in any appeal, 138
 supplicationis, 104
Linley's Treatise on Jurisprudence cited, 26
Litteræ dimissoriae, 138
Litis contestatio, 91, 92 n. 102
 denunciatio, 100
Loss of documents, how supplied, 124
Macrobius cited, 105 n.
Magistrate distinguished from Judex, 12
Manum consortum explained, 87
Manus injectio, 11 n. 12
Missio in possessionem, 89
Mixed actions, 62
Municipal magistrates, their office abridged, 97
Municipia, 61 n.
- Nexum, 10
Nundinae, 84
Objections to witnesses, when made 132
Officiales, their duties, 103
Omissions in instruments, how supplied, 123
Onus probandi, 110—115 in the exceptio non numeratæ, pecuniæ, 113 Oral evidence, 125—133 proofs, how taken, 129 Ordo judicarius, 32
 judiciorum, 55
Parties to the suit could not be witnesses, 126
Partitioning rights, how defended, 75
Periculum of the Judex, 103
Persecutio, 71
Persecutiones in rem and in personam, 32
Personæ infames could not be witnesses, 126
Pignoris capio, 11 n. 25
Plaintiff not bound prodere seipsum, 122
Plano, de, 85
Plebeian element, its influence, 63, 64
 Prætorship, 40
Potestas, what, 38 n. 43
Possessory rights referred to Recuperatores, 69 Præfectus urbi, 96, 137
 prætorio, 139, 140 n.
Præfecturæ, 61 n.
Præjudicia, 67 n. 71
Præs, 93 n
Præs and Prætor, heard appeals, 137
Prætorian actions, 69 edicts, their influence on civil procedure, 44 Prætor, 7, 39, 40, 41 extension of his jurisdiction, 29, 73
Presumptiones, how divided, 116
Presumptive evidence, 116—119
Private documents, 120
Privy Council, imperial, 138
Proconsul heard appeals, 137
Production of documents, how managed, 121
Productiones testium, how many allowed, 133

- Provincial prætorship established, 39
 Provocatio, what, 134—136
 Public documents prove themselves, 120
- Quatuorviri and Duumviri, 61 n.
 Quid æquius melius, 77
 Quiritarian rights referred to Centumvirs, 13 n. 67
- Reciperatio, 66 n.
 Recuperatores, 62, 66, 69
 Sunto, 63
 Register of judgments, 103
 Relatio, 138 and note
 Religio, 76 n.
 Reprobatio, 132
 Rerum actus, 84
 Retractationes, 140 n.
 Revocatio in duplum, 140 n.
 Rights twofold, 3
 their extent, ib.
 their object, ib.
 Roman jurisprudence, its characteristics, 7—11
- Savigny cited, 8, 49
 Secretaria, 86
 Secretarium and Secretum, 131, 132
 Si certum petetur, 80
 Spear, the emblem of Quiritarian ownership, 67
 Sponsor, 93 n.
 Sportulæ, 105
 Stipulatio sistendi causa, 89
 Subselliæ, 65 n.
 Suits, de Plano and pro Tribunali, 85, 89
- Summary process, suits how commenced, 101
 Summoning defendants, how altered, 88, 89
 Summons, literis and edictis, 95
 Supplicationes, 140 n.
- Testis unus testis nullus, 127 and note.
 Thibaut cited, 51
 Travelling expenses, 129
 Treasury, money paid to, how proved, 124
 Tribunes, right of appeal to, 135
- Uti possidetis and utrobi, 52
 Ut inter bonos bene agier, 77
- Vadimonium, 88, 100
 Vas, 93 n.
 Veto, 13
 Vindex, 88
 Vindicatio rei, 75
 Viri consulares, 61 n.
 Vocatio in Jus, 18—20, 19 n.
- Witnesses, their competency, 125 who could not be, 125, 126 their credit estimated by judex, 128, 129 expense in detaining, 130 their examination, how taken, 130—133 Women, when disabled from being witnesses, 126 n.
 Writing, when necessary, 125
 Written pleadings, 92
- Zimmern cited, 51

Cambridge, April, 1857.

A LIST OF
New Books and New Editions,

PUBLISHED BY MACMILLAN & Co.

BY ALEXANDER SMITH,

Secretary to the University of Edinburgh, and Author of "A Life Drama and other Poems."

A New Volume of Poems. Fcap. 8vo. cloth. In the Press.

BY GEORGE WILSON, M.D., F.R.S.E.

Regius Professor of Technology in the University of Edinburgh; President of the Royal Scottish Society of Arts; and Director of the Industrial Museum of Scotland.

The Five Gateways of Knowledge.

In fcap. 8vo. cloth, 2s. 6d.; or elegantly bound in cloth, with richly gilt back and sides, and with gilt leaves, suitable for Prizes or Presents, price 3s. 6d.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"At once attractive and useful. . . . The manner is vivacious and clear; the matter is closely packed, but without confusion."—SPECTATOR, Nov. 8, 1856.

"An extremely pleasant little book . . . entertaining and instructive; and may be welcomed in many a home."—THE EXAMINER, Nov. 15, 1856.

"Dr. Wilson unites poetic with scientific faculty, and this union gives a charm to all he writes. In the little volume before us he has described the five senses in language so popular that a child may comprehend the meaning, so suggestive that philosophers will read it with pleasure."—THE LEADER, Nov. 22, 1856.

"Every page presents us with something worthy of being thought about; every one is bright with the full clear light of the writer's mind, and with his genial humour."—THE SCOTTISH PRESS, Nov. 21, 1856.

A NEW NOVEL.

BY AN OLD BOY.

Tom Brown's School-Days.

In crown 8vo. cloth, 10s. 6d. Just published.

THE WORKS OF

THE REV. WILLIAM ARCHER BUTLER,

Late Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of Dublin.

Uniformly printed and bound, 5 vols. 8vo. cloth, £2 18s.

"A man of glowing genius and diversified accomplishments, whose remains fill these five brilliant volumes."—EDINBURGH REVIEW, July, 1856."One destined, if we mistake not, to take the highest place among writers of our English tongue."—NORTH BRITISH REVIEW, Feb. 1856."Poet, orator, metaphysician, theologian, 'nihil tetigit quod non ornavit.'"

DUBLIN UNIVERSITY MAGAZINE.

"Discrimination and earnestness, beauty and power, a truly philosophical spirit."

BRITISH QUARTERLY.

"A burning and a shining light."—BISHOP OF EXETER."Entitled to stand in the front rank, not merely of ministers of the Irish Church, but of the wisest and best teachers of all denominations."

WESLEYAN MAGAZINE, Feb. 1856.

ALSO SOLD SEPARATELY AS FOLLOWS.

1. *A Fourth Edition of Sermons Doctrinal and Practical.*FIRST SERIES. Edited by the Very Rev. T. WOODWARD, M.A.
Dean of Down, with a Memoir and Portrait. 8vo. cloth, 12s.*"Present a richer combination of the qualities for Sermons of the first class than any we have met with in any living writer."—BRITISH QUARTERLY.*2. A Second Edition of a Second Series of Sermons, Doctrinal and Practical. Edited from the Author's MSS., by J. A. JEREMIE, D.D., Regius Professor of Divinity in the University of Cambridge. 8vo. cloth, 10s. 6d."They are marked by the same originality and vigour of expression, the same richness of imagery and illustration, the same large views and catholic spirit, and the same depth and fervour of devotional feeling, which so remarkably distinguished the preceding Series and which rendered it a most valuable accession to our theological literature."—FROM DR. JEREMIE'S PREFACE."Distinguished by the point and vigour of their style, the happiness of their illustrations, and the largeness of their views."—ATHENÆUM, Feb. 9, 1856."All exceedingly beautiful and valuable."—LITERARY CHURCHMAN.

REV. ARCHER BUTLER'S WORKS.

3. Letters on Romanism. A Reply to DR. NEWMAN'S Essay on Development. Edited by the Very Rev. T. WOODWARD, M.A. Dean of Down. 8vo. cloth, 10s. 6d.

"A work which ought to be in the Library of every Student of Divinity."

BISHOP OF ST. DAVID'S.

"There are books which while elicited by temporary controversy become so rich in genius as to possess a permanent value. The book before us is of that rare class."—BRITISH QUARTERLY, Jan. 1855.

"One of the ablest refutations of Romanism in its latest and most refined form."—NORTH BRITISH REVIEW, Feb. 1856.

"Deserve to be considered the most remarkable proofs of the Author's indomitable energy and power of concentration."—EDINBURGH REVIEW, July, 1856.

4. Lectures on the History of Ancient Philosophy. Edited from the Author's MSS., with Notes, by WILLIAM HEFWORTH THOMPSON, M.A., Regius Professor of Greek in the University of Cambridge. 2 vols. 8vo., £1 5s.

"I have seen enough of them to be convinced of their great scientific value; and am much gratified in finding so important a subject treated with so much learning and acuteness."—SIR WM. HAMILTON, Professor of Logic and Metaphysics, Edinburgh, Feb. 27, 1856.

"Many a good Greek scholar must have lived and died with less of a real knowledge of Plato after years of study, than a thoughtful English reader may receive from this book in a week."—EXAMINER, April, 1856.

"No man in England is more competent than Professor Thompson to pronounce upon the value of any contribution to this branch of ancient learning; and he says,—

"Of the dialectic and physics of Plato they are the only exposition at once full, accurate, and popular, with which I am acquainted: being far more accurate than the French, and incomparably more popular than the German treatises on these departments of the Platonic philosophy."

"We must not dismiss Professor Butler's Lectures without testifying to the admirable editing to which they have been submitted."

SPECTATOR, May 3, 1856.

"We are confident that every intelligent reader will join in the high encomium which the learned Editor has pronounced upon them."

EDINBURGH REVIEW, July, 1856.

LECTURES TO LADIES ON PRACTICAL SUBJECTS.

Third Edition, revised.

Crown 8vo. cloth, 7s. 6d.

CONTENTS:—INTRODUCTORY LECTURE. Plan of a Female College for the Help of the Rich and the Poor.—I. The College and the Hospital. By the Rev. F. D. MAURICE—II. The Country Parish. By the Rev. C. KINGSLEY—III. On Over-work, Distress, and Anxiety, as Causes of Mental and Bodily Disease. By GEORGE JOHNSON, M.D., Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, Physician to King's College Hospital—IV. On Dispensaries and Allied Institutions. By EDWARD H. SIEVEKING, M.D., Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians—V. District Visiting. By the Rev. J. LL. DAVIES, Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, and Rector of Christ Church, Marylebone—VI. The Influence of Occupation on Health. By Dr. CHAMBERS, Physician to St. Mary's Hospital—VII. On Law as it affects the Poor. By FITZJAMES STEPHEN, LL.B. of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law—VIII. On the Every-day Work of Ladies. By ARCHDEACON ALLEN—IX. On Teaching by Words. By the Very Rev. DEAN TRENCH—X. On Sanitary Law. By TOM TAYLOR, Esq., Secretary to the General Board of Health—XI. Workhouse Visiting. By the Rev. J. S. BREWER—POSTSCRIPT.

"A glance at the subjects treated of, and a bare enumeration of the names of the gentlemen who delivered the lectures, should be enough to ensure careful attention to them. . . . These men, themselves an honour to their times, do honour to woman by giving her the benefit of the best thoughts of manly minds."—EDINBURGH REVIEW, Jan. 1856.

"We scarcely know a volume containing more sterling good sense, or a finer expression of modern intelligence on social subjects."—CHAMBERS' JOURNAL, Nov. 22, 1856.

BY THE LATE HENRY LUSHINGTON, AND FRANKLIN LUSHINGTON.

La Nation Bontiquière: and other Poems, chiefly Political. With a Preface. By HENRY LUSHINGTON.

POINTS OF WAR. By FRANKLIN LUSHINGTON.

In 1 vol. fcap. 8vo. cloth, 3s.

"Full of truth and warmth, and noble life.....In these few pages are contained some of the last thoughts of a fine-hearted man of genius.....One of a class that must be ranked among the rarest of our time."—EXAMINER, Aug. 18, 1855.

BY JULIUS CHARLES HARE, M.A.,

Late Archdeacon of Lewes, and Rector of Herstmonceux, Chaplain in Ordinary to the Queen, and formerly Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge.

UNIFORMLY PRINTED AND BOUND IN CLOTH.

1. Charges to the Clergy of the Archdeaconry of Lewes. Delivered at the Ordinary Visitations from the year 1840 to 1854, with Notes on the Principal Events affecting the Church during that period. With an Introduction, explanatory of his position in the Church, with reference to the Parties which divide it. 3 vols. 8vo. cloth, £1 11s. 6d.
2. Charges to the Clergy of the Archdeaconry of Lewes. Delivered at the Ordinary Visitations in the years 1843, 1845, 1846. Never before published. With an Introduction, explanatory of his position in the Church, with reference to the Parties that divide it. 8vo. cloth, 6s. 6d.
This is included in the 3 vols. of collected Charges, but is published separately for the sake of those who have the rest.
3. Miscellaneous Pamphlets on some of the Leading Questions agitated in the Church during the last Ten Years. 8vo. cloth, 12s.
4. A Second Edition of Vindication of Luther against his recent English Assailants. 8vo. cloth, 7s.
5. A Second Edition of The Mission of the Comforter. With Notes. 8vo. cloth, 12s.
6. A Second Series of Parish Sermons. 8vo. cloth, 12s.
7. A Second Edition of The Victory of Faith. 8vo. cloth, 5s.
8. A Second Edition of The Contest with Rome. A Charge, delivered in 1851. With Notes, especially in answer to DR. NEWMAN's recent Lectures. 8vo. cloth, 10s. 6d.

This is included in the 3 vols. of Charges.

BY JOHN McLEOD CAMPBELL.

The Nature of the Atonement, and its Relation to Remission of Sins and Eternal Life. 8vo. cloth, 10s. 6d.

"This is a remarkable book, as indicating the mode in which a devout and intellectual mind has found its way, almost unassisted, out of the extreme Lutheran and Calvinistic views of the Atonement into a healthier atmosphere of doctrine. . . . We cannot assent to all the positions laid down by this writer, but he is entitled to be spoken respectfully of, both because of his evident earnestness and reality, and the tender mode in which he deals with the opinions of others from whom he feels compelled to differ."—LITERARY CHURCHMAN, March 8, 1856.

"Deserves wide celebrity."—CHRISTIAN TIMES.

BY THE REV. G. E. LYNCH COTTON, M.A.,

Master of Marlborough College, Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of London, formerly Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge.

Sermons: Chiefly connected with Public Events, 1854.

Fcap. 8vo. cloth, 3s.

"A volume of which we can speak with high admiration."

CHRISTIAN REMEMBRANCER.

BY THE RIGHT REV. JOHN WILLIAM COLENZO, D.D.,

Lord Bishop of Natal, formerly Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge.

1. Ten Weeks in Natal. A Journal of a First Tour of Visitation among the Colonists and Zulu Kaffirs of Natal. With four Lithographs and a Map. Fcap. 8vo. cloth, 5s.

"A most interesting and charmingly written little book."—EXAMINER.

"The Church has good reason to be grateful for the publication."

COLONIAL CHURCH CHRONICLE.

2. A Second Edition of Village Sermons.

Fcap. 8vo. cloth, 2s. 6d.

3. Companion to the Communion. The Communion Service from the Prayer Book: with Select Readings from the Writings of the Rev. F. D. MAURICE. Fine Edition, rubricated and bound in morocco antique, gilt edges, 6s.; or in cloth, red edges, 2s. 6d.; common paper, limp cloth, 1s.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "VISITING MY RELATIONS."

Waters of Comfort. A small Volume of Devotional Poetry of a Practical Character. Fcap. 8vo. cloth, 4s. Just ready.

Depth of thought, closeness and force of expression.....call to mind the sacred poets of the 17th century.—SPECTATOR.

"A very beautiful little volume of verse it is,—meditative, spiritual, and practical."—NONCONFORMIST.

BY THE REV. CHARLES KINGSLEY, F.S.A.

*Rector of Eversley, and Canon of Middleham.*1. *A Second Edition of Two Years Ago.*3 vols. crown 8vo. cloth, £1 11s. 6d. Just ready."Much the best book Mr. Kingsley has written."—SATURDAY REVIEW.2. The Heroes: Greek Fairy Tales for my Children.

With Eight Illustrations drawn on wood by the Author. Beautifully printed on tinted paper and elegantly bound in cloth, with gilt leaves, 7s. 6d.

"The fascination of a fairy tale is given to each legend."—EXAMINER."MR. KINGSLEY has imbued his narrative with a classical feeling, and thrown over it the glow of a rich imagination and a poetical spirit."—SPECTATOR."It is admirably adapted for the perusal of young people, who will grow both wiser and merrier while they read."—MORNING POST, Jan. 4, 1856."If the public accepts our recommendation, this book will run through many editions."—GUARDIAN, March 12, 1856.3. A Second Edition of "Westward Ho!" or the Voyages and Adventures of Sir Amyas Leigh, Knight, of Borrough, in the County of Devon, in the reign of Her most Glorious Majesty Queen Elizabeth. Rendered into modern English. 3 vols. crown 8vo. cloth, £1 11s. 6d.

"MR. KINGSLEY has selected a good subject, and has written a good novel to excellent purpose."—THE TIMES, Aug. 18, 1855."Noble and well-timed."—SPECTATOR.4. A Third Edition of Glaucus; or, the Wonders of the Shore. With a Frontispiece. Fcap. 8vo. beautifully bound in cloth, with gilt leaves, 3s. 6d."As useful and exciting a sea-side companion as we have ever seen."—GUARDIAN."Its pages sparkle with life, they open up a thousand sources of unanticipated pleasure, and combine amusement with instruction in a very happy and unworked degree."—ECLECTIC REVIEW.5. A Second Edition of Phaethon; or, Loose Thoughts for Loose Thinkers. Crown 8vo. boards, 2s."Its suggestions may meet half way many a latent doubt, and, like a light breeze, lift from the soul clouds that are gathering heavily, and threatening to settle down in wintry gloom on the summer of many a fair and promising young life."—SPECTATOR."One of the most interesting works we ever read."—NONCONFORMIST.6. Alexandria and Her Schools. Being Four Lectures delivered at the Philosophical Institution, Edinburgh. With a Preface. Crown 8vo. cloth, 5s."A series of brilliant biographical and literary sketches, interspersed with comments of the closest modern, or rather universal application."—SPECTATOR.

LORD ARTHUR HERVEY, M.A.,Rector of Ickworth-with-Horinger.

1. The Genealogies of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, as contained in the Gospels of St. Matthew and St. Luke, reconciled with each other and with the Genealogy of the House of David, from Adam to the close of the Canon of the Old Testament, and shown to be in harmony with the true Chronology of the Times. 8vo. cloth, 10s. 6d.

"The production of a thorough scholar."—BRITISH QUARTERLY."An addition of mark to our Library of Biblical Criticism."—GUARDIAN."It seems to us that in view of the kind of criticism to which the Old and New Testament records are now subjected, his work has special importance and claims."—NONCONFORMIST."We commend LORD HERVEY's book to our readers as a valuable storehouse of information on this important subject, and as indicative of an approximation towards a solution of the difficulties with which it is beset."—JOURNAL OF SACRED LITERATURE.

2. The Inspiration of Holy Scripture. Five Sermons Preached before the University in the month of December, 1855. 8vo. cloth, 3s. 6d.

"A valuable addition to his former excellent work."

BRITISH BANNER, March 13, 1856.

"Seasonable and valuable."—BRITISH AND FOREIGN EVANGELICAL REVIEW."Give good proof that the writer is himself a careful student of the sacred volume."—LITERARY CHURCHMAN, May 3, 1856.BY THE RIGHT REV. CHARLES PERRY, D.D.,Lord Bishop of Melbourne, formerly Fellow and Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge.*

- Five Sermons, Preached before the University of Cambridge in the month of November, 1855.*

Crown 8vo. cloth, 3s. Just ready."These Sermons exhibit a serious earnestness, and the results of scholarly training, showing themselves in a clear and forcible style."—SPECTATOR, March 8, 1856."Catholic in spirit, and evangelical in sentiment."

EVANGELICAL MAGAZINE, May, 1856.

BY ISAAC TAYLOR, ESQ.,*Author of "The Natural History of Enthusiasm."The Restoration of Belief.

Crown 8vo. cloth, 8s. 6d.

"A volume which contains logical sagacity, and philosophic comprehension, as well as the magnanimity and courage of faith, in richer profusion than any other work bearing on religious matters that has been addressed to this generation. 'The Restoration of Belief' may, in many respects, take a place among the books of the nineteenth century, corresponding to that justly conceded by us to the 'Analogy' of Butler in the literature of the last age, or to the 'Thoughts' of Pascal in that of the age preceding."

NORTH BRITISH REVIEW, Nov. 1855.

"A book which I would recommend to every student."—REV. C. A. SWAINSON, Principal of Chichester Theological College.

BY GEORGE BOOLE, LL.D.,

Professor of Mathematics in Queen's College, Cork.

The Philosophy of Logic.

Svo. cloth. Nearly ready.

BY BROOKE FOSS WESTCOTT, M.A.

Late Fellow of Trinity College, and FENTON JOHN ANTHONY HORT, M.A.

Fellow of Trinity College.

The New Testament in the Original Greek :

The Text Revised.

Preparing.

BY CHARLES COLLIER, M.D. F.R.S.,

Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians.

Aristotle on the Vital Principle.

Translated from the Original Text, with Notes. Crown Svo. cloth, 8s. 6d.

"Has rendered the original into elegant and idiomatic English.....An important feature of the work lies in the notes, in which the learned translator comments on Aristotle's physiological facts and conclusions, illustrating or amending them by the results of modern science. The utility of the translation is further enhanced by the addition of preludes to each chapter, in which the scope of the argument is briefly stated."—BRITISH QUARTERLY, Jan., 1856.

BY THE RIGHT REV. GEORGE AUGUSTUS SELWYN, D.D.,

Lord Bishop of New Zealand, formerly Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge.A Third Edition of The Work of Christ in the World.

Four Sermons, Preached before the University of Cambridge on the Four Sundays preceding Advent, in the Year of our Lord, 1854. Published for the benefit of the New Zealand Church Fund.

Crown Svo. 2s.

BY J. LLEWELLYN DAVIES, M.A.

Fellow of Trinity College, and Rector of Christ Church, Marylebone.

St. Paul and Modern Thought : Remarks on some of the Views advanced in PROFESSOR JOWETT'S Commentary on St. Paul.

Svo. sewed, 2s. 6d.

"We can heartily recommend Mr. Davies's Essay."—SPECTATOR, April 26, 1856.

"A piece of profound as well as genial criticism."—NATIONAL REVIEW.

"Especially remarkable for philosophical depth and power of argument."—CHRISTIAN REMEMBRANCE.

BY REV. D. J. VAUGHAN, M.A.

Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, and Incumbent of St. Mark's, Whitechapel, London.

Sermons Preached in St. John's Church, Leicester, during the Years 1855 and 1856. Crown 8vo. cloth, 5s. 6d.

Just ready.

BY MACVEY NAPIER, ESQ.,

Late Editor of the "Edinburgh Review," and of the "Encyclopædia Britannica."

Lord Bacon and Sir Walter Raleigh. Critical and Biographical Essays. Post 8vo. cloth, 7s. 6d.

"The Article on Bacon is clear, accurate, convincing, complete. The Article on Raleigh is very valuable, first, because MR. NAPIER has had access to many documents unknown to former biographers, and next, because he completely clears Raleigh from the old imputation of deceit about the Guiana mine, as well as of the other minor charges."—NORTH BRITISH REVIEW.

BY J. E. B. MAYOR, M.A.;

Fellow and Assistant Tutor of St. John's College.

1. Lives of Nicholas Ferrar, of Clare Hall.

By his Brother John, and Dr. Jebb. Now first edited, with Illustrations. Fcap. 8vo. 7s. 6d.

2. Autobiography of Matthew Robinson.

Now first Edited. With Illustrations. Fcap. 8vo. cloth, 5s. 6d.
Just ready.

BY JOSEPH FRANCIS THRUPP, M.A.,

Vicar of Barrington, Cambridgeshire, late Fellow of Trinity College.

Antient Jerusalem. A New Investigation into the History, Topography, and Plan of the City, Environs, and Temple. Designed principally to illustrate the records and prophecies of Scripture. With Map and Plans. 8vo. cloth, 15s.

"He is calm and candid, and has a thorough acquaintance with all that has been written upon his subject."—ATHENÆUM.

"A book of no ordinary value. Patient research, candour, and a reverence for divine truth distinguish the whole volume."—JOURNAL OF SACRED LITERATURE.

"A well-directed and able endeavour to throw additional light upon the history and topography of the Holy City. Those who read it will find reason to be grateful to the author."—LITERARY CHURCHMAN.

BY X and Y (Two Unknown Quantities).

A Long Vacation Ramble in Norway and Sweden.

"Skaal to the Northland, Skaal!"

"And dark, and true, and tender is the North."

In crown 8vo. cloth, 6s. 6d. Just ready.

BY THOMAS RAWSON BIRKS, M.A.,

RECTOR OF KELSALL, FORMERLY FELLOW OF TRINITY COLLEGE,

Author of "The Life of the Rev. E. Bickersteth."

The Difficulties of Belief, in connexion with the Creation and the Fall.

Crown 8vo. cloth, 4s. 6d.

"Without binding ourselves to the immediate acceptance of this interesting volume, we may yet express our hearty approbation of its tone."

CHRISTIAN REMEMBRANCE, April, 1856.

"A profound and masterly essay."—ECLECTIC, May, 1856.

"His arguments are original, and carefully and logically elaborated. We may add that they are distinguished by a marked sobriety and reverence for the Word of God."—RECORD.

"Of sterling value."—LONDON QUARTERLY.

BY THE HON. HENRY E. J. HOWARD, D.D.,

Dean of Lichfield.

1. The Book of Genesis, according to the Version of the LXX. Translated into English, with Notices of its Omissions and Insertions, and with Notes on the Passages in which it differs from our Authorized Version. Crown 8vo. cloth, 8s. 6d.

"The Work deserves high commendation; it is an excellent introduction to the comparative study of God's Word, in these three languages with which an ordinary English student is mainly, if not entirely concerned."—GUARDIAN.

2. The Books of Exodus and Leviticus.

Crown 8vo. uniform with the above, cloth, 10s. 6d.

BY THE REV. C. A. SWAINSON, M.A.

Principal of the Chichester Theological College.

A Handbook to Butler's Analogy; with a few Notes.

Crown 8vo. sewed, 1s. 6d.

BY CHARLES HARDWICK, M.A.

Christian Advocate in the University of Cambridge.

Christ and other Masters: An Historical Inquiry into some of the chief Parallelisms and Contrasts between Christianity and the Religious Systems of the Ancient World; with special reference to prevailing Difficulties and Objections. Part I. Introduction. Part II. Religions of India.

In 8vo. cloth, 7s. 6d. each.

BY CHARLES MANSFIELD, M.A.

1. Letters from Paraguay, Brazil, and the Plate.

By the late CHARLES MANSFIELD, M.A., Clare Hall, Cambridge.

With a life by CHARLES KINGSLEY, Rector of Eversley. Post 8vo.

With a Map, and a Portrait, and numerous Woodcuts. 12s. 6d.

Just ready.

"An interesting and instructive volume."—MORNING POST.

"A delightfully written book."—BRITISH QUARTERLY.

"Full of varied matter and earnest thought."—NEW QUARTERLY.

2. On the Constitution of Salts. Edited from the Author's

MS. by N. H. S. MASKELYNE, M.A., Wadham College, and Reader in Mineralogy in the University of Oxford. In the Press.

BY C. MANSFIELD INGLEBY, M.A.

Of Trinity College, Cambridge;

Teacher of Logic in the Industrial Department of the Birmingham and Midland Institute.

Outlines of Theoretical Logic.

Founded on the New Analytic of SIR WILLIAM HAMILTON.

Designed for a Text-book in Schools and Colleges.

In Fcap. 8vo. cloth, 3s. 6d. Just ready.

BY THE LATE HENRY MACKENZIE, B.A.,

Scholar of Trinity College.

The Christian Clergy of the First Ten Centuries; their Beneficial Influence on European Progress.

Crown 8vo. cloth, 6s. 6d.

"He has shown considerable research into the History of the early Clergy, and expresses himself with a facility and force which many an experienced writer may envy. He has displayed in this essay a sound judgment, a freedom from prejudice, and a conscientious endeavour to reach the truth, which convinces us that an able and excellent man was lost to the world by the untimely death of HENRY MACKENZIE."—ATHENÆUM, Jan. 12, 1856.

"We rarely meet with a prize-essay of so much general interest."

GUARDIAN, Feb. 6, 1856.

BY DAVID MASSON, M.A.,

Professor of English Literature in University College, London.

Essays, Biographical and Critical : chiefly on English Poets.

8vo. cloth, 12s. 6d.

OPINIONS.

"Mr. Masson has succeeded in producing a series of criticisms in relation to creative literature, which are satisfactory as well as subtle,—which are not only ingenious, but which possess the rarer recommendation of being usually just . . . But we pass over these Essays to that which is in the main a new, and, according to our judgment, an excellent biographical sketch of Chatterton. . . This 'Story of the Year 1770,' as Mr. Masson entitles it, stands for nearly 200 pages in his volume, and contains, by preference, the fruits of his judgment and research in an elaborated and discursive memoir. . . Its merit consists in the illustration afforded by Mr. Masson's inquiries into contemporary circumstances, and the clear traces thus obtained of Chatterton's London life and experience. . . Mr. Masson unravels this mystery very completely."—TIMES, Nov. 4, 1856.

"No one who reads a single page of Mr. Masson will be likely to content himself with that alone. He will see at a glance that he has come across a man endowed with a real love of poetry ; a clear, fresh, happy insight into the poet's heart ; and a great knowledge of the historical connexion of its more marked epochs in England. He has distinct and pleasant thoughts to utter ; he is not above doing his very best to utter them well ; there is nothing slovenly or clumsy or untidy in their expression ; they leap along in a bright stream, bubbling, sparkling, and transparent."—THE GUARDIAN, Nov. 5, 1856.

"Worthy of being ranked among the very foremost of their class. . . The longest and finest composition of the work—a gem in literary biography—is its 'Chatterton, a Story of the Year 1770.' . . This singularly interesting and powerful biography fills up this sad outline as it never was filled up before."

EDINBURGH WITNESS (edited by Hugh Miller), Aug. 23, 1856.

"His life of Chatterton is a complete, symmetrical and marvellous work of art . . . a classical biography."—THE GLASGOW COMMONWEALTH, Aug. 16, 1856.

"Will secure both attention and respect."—EXAMINER, Sept. 6, 1856.

"Very admirable criticisms, which show not only a thorough acquaintance with the works he criticises, but a deep sense of poetic beauty."

DAILY NEWS, Aug. 5, 1856.

"We know not where to find a larger amount of discriminating, far-seeing, and genial criticism within the same compass."

BRITISH QUARTERLY REVIEW, July, 1856.

"Here is a biography (the essay on Chatterton) told without exaggeration, without unwarranted use of hypothetic incidents, yet surpassing the most highly-wrought fiction in its power over our emotions."

THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW, July, 1856.

"Not only a series of biographical studies, but in some sort a philosophical history of English poetry from Shakspeare to Alexander Smith."

THE LEADER, June 4, 1856.

"Distinguished by a remarkable power of analysis, a clear statement of the actual facts on which speculation is based, and an appropriate beauty of language. These Essays should be popular with serious men."

THE ATHENÆUM, May 24, 1856.

BY JOHN HAMILTON, (of St. Ernan's,) M.A.

Of St. John's College, Cambridge.

On Truth and Error: Thoughts, in Prose and Verse, on the Principles of Truth, and the Causes and Effects of Error.
Crown 8vo. bound in cloth, with red leaves, 10s. 6d. Just ready.

BY THE REV. F. D. MAURICE, M.A.,

Chaplain of Lincoln's Inn.

1. The Gospel of St. John. A Series of Discourses.
Second Edition, Crown 8vo. cloth, 10s. 6d. Just ready.
2. The Doctrine of Sacrifice deduced from the Scriptures.
Crown 8vo. cloth, 7s. 6d.
3. Learning and Working. The Religion of Rome, and its influence on Modern Civilization.
In 1 vol. Crown 8vo. cloth, 5s.
4. Lectures on the Ecclesiastical History of the First and Second Centuries. 8vo. cloth, 10s. 6d.
5. Theological Essays. SECOND EDITION. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d.
6. Patriarchs and Lawgivers of the Old Testament.
Second Edition. Crown 8vo. cloth, 6s.
7. Prophets and Kings of the Old Testament.
Second Edition. Crown 8vo. cloth, 10s. 6d.
8. The Unity of the New Testament.
Lectures on the Gospels of St. Matthew, St. Mark, and St. Luke, and on the Epistles of St. Paul, St. Peter, St. James, and St. Jude.
8vo. cloth, 14s.

REV. F. D. MAURICE'S WORKS—continued.

9. Christmas Day, and other Sermons. 8vo. cloth, 10s. 6d.
 10. On the Religions of the World. Third Edition.
Fcp. 8vo. cloth, 5s.
- CONTENTS: Mahometanism—Hindooism—Buddhism—The Old Persian Faith—The Egyptian—The Greek—The Roman—The Gothic—The Relation between Christianity and Hindooism, &c.
11. On the Prayer-Book. Second Edition. Fcp. 8vo. cloth, 5s. 6d.
 12. The Church a Family. Fcp. 8vo. cloth, 4s. 6d.
 13. On the Lord's Prayer. Third Edition. Fcp. 8vo. cloth 2s. 6d.
 14. On the Sabbath, and other Sermons. Fcp. 8vo. cloth, 2s. 6d.
 15. Law on the Fable of the Bees. Fcp. 8vo. cloth, 4s. 6d.

The Word "Eternal" and the Punishment of the Wicked. Third Edition. 1s.

Eternal Life and Eternal Death. 1s. 6d.

The Name Protestant. Three Letters to Mr. Palmer. Second Edition. 3s.

Right and Wrong Methods of Supporting Protestantism. 1s.

The Duty of a Protestant in the Oxford Election. 1847. 1s.

The Case of Queen's College, London. 1s. 6d.

Plan of a Female College. 6d.

Death and Life. In Memoriam C. B. M. 1s.

Administrative Reform. 3d.

PROSPECTUS OF A SERIES

OF

MANUALS FOR THEOLOGICAL STUDENTS

NOW IN COURSE OF PUBLICATION.

It is now about four years since the Prospectus of this Series was first issued. Four volumes have now been published, and several others are in an advanced state. The reception which the volumes already published have met with, has fully justified the anticipation with which the Publishers commenced the Series, and warrants them in the belief, that their aim of supplying books "concise, comprehensive, and accurate," "convenient for the professional Student and interesting to the general reader," has been not unsuccessfully fulfilled.

The following paragraphs appeared in the original Prospectus, and may be here conveniently reproduced:—

"The Authors being Clergymen of the English Church, and the Series being designed primarily for the use of Candidates for office in her Ministry, the books will seek to be in accordance with her spirit and principles; and therefore, (because the spirit and principles of the English Church teach charity and truth,) in treating of the opinions and principles of other communions, every effort will be made to avoid acrimony or misrepresentation.

"It will be the aim of the writers throughout the Series to avoid all dogmatic expression of doubtful or individual opinions."

THE FOUR FOLLOWING VOLUMES ARE NOW READY:—

THEOLOGICAL MANUALS—continued.

1. A General View of the History of the Canon of the New Testament during the FIRST FOUR CENTURIES.

Crown 8vo. cloth, 12s. 6d.

BY BROOKE FOSS WESTCOTT, M.A.,

Assistant Master of Harrow School, formerly Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A work which forms one of the invaluable series of Theological Manuals now in course of publication at Cambridge."

BRITISH AND FOREIGN EVANGELICAL REVIEW, July, 1856.

"The Author is one of those who are teaching us that it is possible to rifle the storehouses of German theology, without bearing away the taint of their atmosphere: and to recognise the value of their accumulated treasures, and even track the vagaries of their theoretic ingenuity, without abandoning in the pursuit the clear sight and sound feeling of English common sense . . . It is by far the best and most complete book of the kind; and we should be glad to see it well placed on the lists of our examining chaplains."—GUARDIAN, Oct. 3, 1855."Learned, dispassionate, discriminating, worthy of his subject and the present state of Christian Literature in relation to it."

BRITISH QUARTERLY, Oct. 3, 1855.

"To the student in Theology it will prove an admirable Text-Book: and to all others who have any curiosity on the subject it will be satisfactory as one of the most useful and instructive pieces of history which the records of the Church supply."—LONDON QUARTERLY, Oct. 1855."The Author carries into the execution of his design a careful and painstaking scholarship . . . Considered as a list of Testimonials in favour of the canonical writings, our Author's work deserves the praise of great diligence and manifest conscientiousness."—NATIONAL REVIEW, Oct. 1855."If the rest of the series of manuals, of which the present volume forms a part, are as ably executed, the Christian public will be greatly indebted to the projectors of the plan."—LITERARY CHURCHMAN."There is nothing, so far as we know, resembling it in the English tongue . . . We have here presented to us a striking and luminous view of a very broad and comprehensive subject, marked throughout by rich and copious erudition. A volume which we consider a most valuable addition to the literature of Revelation. Scripture Expositors, of whatever name, will acknowledge that they have been laid under deep obligation by the work of MR. WESTCOTT."

BRITISH BANNER, Jan. 4, 1856.

"The conception of the work, and the discrimination and learning with which it is executed, adapt it most thoroughly to the present state and forms of controversy on the subject to which it relates."—NONCONFORMIST, Jan. 23, 1856.

THEOLOGICAL MANUALS—continued.

2. A History of the Christian Church during the Reformation. By CHARLES HARDWICK, M.A., Fellow of St. Catharine's College, Cambridge, Divinity Lecturer of King's College, and Christian Advocate in the University of Cambridge. Crown 8vo. cloth, 10s. 6d.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"The whole volume displays a profusion of learning, great accuracy and honesty in collecting and collating authorities, a clear as well as a concise narrative of events; and it always refers to the authorities on which the history is grounded."

CHRISTIAN REMEMBRANCE, April, 1856.

"Exhibits a deep comprehension and a firm grasp of his theme, with the ease and mastery in treatment which such qualities generally impart.....The utility of MR. HARDWICK'S work consists in bringing the greater and minor histories connected with the Reformation into a single volume of compact shape, as well as presenting their broad features to the student. The merit of the history consists in the penetration with which the opinions of the age, the traits of its remarkable men, and the intellectual character of the history, are perceived, and the force with which they are presented."—SPECTATOR, March 15, 1856.

"A more satisfactory manual than England has hitherto produced.....He has laboured learnedly and diligently, at first hand, among the sources and authorities for the ecclesiastical history of the period of which he writes; and has produced a work really original, as far as such a work can be; independent in its judgments; written with taste and feeling; and offering, in its large body of notes, aids and guidance to the fullest investigation the subject can possibly receive."—NONCONFORMIST, April 16, 1856.

"His readers will find him a lively, a luminous, and interesting companion, as well as a generally trustworthy guide."—BRITISH BANNER, March 13, 1855.

"He enters fairly into the questions of which he speaks, and does not attempt to evade their difficulty by vague statements . . . We cordially recommend this work to those who desire an orderly and lucid summary of the leading events of the Reformation . . . We may also observe, that Mr. Hardwick has availed himself of the latest German authorities."

LITERARY CHURCHMAN, May 3, 1856.

"The style is lucid and the plan comprehensive. The facts are well arranged, and their relations ably brought out . . . Will be esteemed by most students as judicious, helpful, and suggestive."

EVANGELICAL REVIEW, May, 1856.

"He writes from genuine and independent sources. Though his work is short, it partakes in no respect of the character of a compilation."

THE PRESS, July 12, 1856.

"It is impossible to speak too highly of the extensive and careful research the book everywhere manifests."—BAPTIST MAGAZINE, Aug. 1856.

THEOLOGICAL MANUALS—continued.

3. A History of the Christian Church from the Seventh Century to the Reformation. By CHARLES HARDWICK, M.A., Fellow of St. Catharine's College, Divinity Lecturer of King's College, and Christian Advocate in the University of Cambridge, Author of "A History of the XXXIX Articles." With Four Maps constructed for this Work by A. Keith Johnston.

Crown 8vo. cloth, 10s. 6d.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"It is full in references and authority, systematic and formal in division, with enough of life in the style to counteract the dryness inseparable from its brevity, and exhibiting the results rather than the principles of investigation. Mr. HARDWICK is to be congratulated on the successful achievement of a difficult task."—CHRISTIAN REMEMBRANCER, Oct. 1853.

"He has bestowed patient and extensive reading on the collection of his materials; he has selected them with judgment; and he presents them in an equable and compact style."—SPECTATOR, Sept. 17, 1853.

"This book is one of a promised series of 'THEOLOGICAL MANUALS.' In one respect, it may be taken as a sign of the times. It is a small unpretending volume in appearance, but it is based on learning enough to have sufficed, half a century since, for the ground of two or three quartos, or at least for several portly octavos. For its purpose it is admirable, giving you a careful and intelligent summary of events, and at the same time indicating the best sources of information for the further guidance of the student. Among the authorities thus referred to, we find the most modern as well as the most ancient, the continental as well as the English."—BRITISH QUARTERLY, Nov. 1853.

"It is distinguished by the same diligent research and conscientious acknowledgment of authorities which procured for Mr. HARDWICK'S 'History of the Articles of Religion' such a favourable reception."

NOTES AND QUERIES, Oct. 8, 1853.

"To a good method and good materials Mr. HARDWICK adds that great virtue, a perfectly transparent style. We did not expect to find great literary qualities in such a manual, but we have found them; we should be satisfied in this respect with conciseness and intelligibility; but while this book has both, it is also elegant, highly finished, and highly interesting."

NONCONFORMIST, Nov. 30, 1853.

"As a manual for the student of Ecclesiastical History in the Middle Ages, we know no English work which can be compared to Mr. HARDWICK'S book. It has two great merits, that it constantly refers the reader to the authorities, both original and critical, on which its statements are founded; and that it preserves a just proportion in dealing with various subjects."

GUARDIAN, April 12, 1854.

THEOLOGICAL MANUALS—continued.

4. A History of the Book of Common Prayer, together with a Rationale of the several Offices. By the Rev. FRANCIS PROCTER, M.A., Vicar of Witton, Norfolk, formerly Fellow of St. Catharine's College, Cambridge. Second Edition, revised and enlarged. Crown 8vo. cloth, 10s. 6d.

"MR. PROCTER'S 'History of the Book of Common Prayer' is by far the best commentary extant Not only do the present illustrations embrace the whole range of original sources indicated by MR. PALMER, but MR. PROCTER compares the present Book of Common Prayer with the Scotch and American forms; and he frequently sets out in full the Sarum Offices. As a manual of extensive information, historical and ritual, imbued with sound Church principles, we are entirely satisfied with MR. PROCTER'S important volume."

CHRISTIAN REMEMBRANCER, April, 1855.

"It is a résumé of all that has been done in the way of investigation in reference to the Prayer-Book."—ATHENÆUM, Feb. 17, 1855.

"We can have little doubt that MR. PROCTER'S History of our Liturgy will soon supersede the well-known work of WHEATLY, and become a much-used handbook beyond the circuits of the University for the more immediate use of which it has been produced."—NOTES AND QUERIES, March, 1855.

"Although very decidedly anti-Roman in its tone, we gladly accept it as a substitute for the dull and dreary dogmatism of WHEATLY. It presents, in a popular and agreeable narrative, the history of those variations to which so much attention has been directed during the late eventful controversies; and while it contains a very careful, learned and scholarlike exposition of these changes, it also furnishes a most valuable commentary on the successive texts of the formularies themselves, as they are exhibited either in the original editions, or in the useful manuals of BULLEY and KEELING."—DUBLIN REVIEW (Roman Catholic), April, 1855.

"We can speak with just praise of this compendious but comprehensive volume. It appears to be compiled with great care and judgment, and has profited largely by the accumulated materials collected by the learning and research of the last fifty years. It is a manual of great value to the student of Ecclesiastical History and of almost equal interest to every admirer of the Liturgy and Services of the English Church."—LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW, April, 1855.

"It is indeed a complete and fairly-written history of the Liturgy; and from the dispassionate way in which disputed points are touched on, will prove to many troubled consciences what ought to be known to them, viz.:—that they may, without fear of compromising the principles of evangelical truth, give their assent and consent to the contents of the Book of Common Prayer. MR. PROCTER has done a great service to the Church by this admirable digest."

CHURCH OF ENGLAND QUARTERLY, April, 1855.

FOR A LIST OF THOSE IN IMMEDIATE PREPARATION, SEE NEXT PAGE.

Theological Manuals.

THE FOLLOWING WORKS OF THE SERIES ARE IN PREPARATION.

An Introduction to the Study of the Old Testament, with an Outline of Scripture History.

Notes, Critical and Explanatory, on the Hebrew Text of the Prophet ISAIAH.

The New Testament in the Original Greek : a revised Text.

An Introduction to the Study of the Gospels.
[In the Press.

Epistles.

Notes, Critical and Explanatory, on the Greek Text of the FOUR GOSPELS AND THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES.

Notes, Critical and Explanatory, on the Greek Text of the CANONICAL EPISTLES AND THE APOCALYPSE.

A History of the Christian Church during THE FIRST SIX CENTURIES.

A History of the Christian Church from the Beginning of the XVIIth CENTURY TO THE PRESENT TIME.

An Historical Exposition of the Apostles', Nicene, and Athanasian CREEDS.

An Exposition of the Articles of the Church of England.

Others are in progress, and will be announced in due time.

THE JOURNAL
OF CLASSICAL AND SACRED PHILOLOGY.

Nos I. to X. price 4s. each. Vols I. II. and III. in cloth, 12s. 6d. each.

This Journal has been established as a medium of communication between Scholars and others interested in Classical and Sacred Philology. The first number appeared in March, 1854; and it is proposed to continue the publication of three numbers, forming a volume yearly, in March, June, and December.

A FEW COMPLETE COPIES IN 9 VOLS. 8VO. CLOTH, PRICE £7 4s., CAN STILL BE HAD OF

THE CAMBRIDGE AND DUBLIN MATHEMATICAL JOURNAL.
WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND OF AUTHORS.

This important Work was commenced in 1846, and the last volume was completed in 1854. During these nine years, it received original contributions on almost every branch of pure and applied Mathematics, by many of the most distinguished British Mathematicians, and also by several of the most eminent Foreign. It may, therefore, justly claim a place in every Scientific, Public, or Private Library.

"Another instance of the efficiency of the course of study in this University, in producing not merely expert algebraists, but sound and original mathematical thinkers, (and, perhaps, a more striking one, from the generality of its contributors being men of comparatively junior standing), is to be found in this Journal, which is full of very original communications."—SIR JOHN HERSCHEL'S Address at the British Association.

"A work of great merit and service to science. Its various contributors have exhibited extensive mathematical learning and vigorous originality of thought."—SIR W. ROWAN HAMILTON.

"A publication which is justly distinguished for the originality and elegance of its contributions to every department of analysis."—REV. PROF. PEACOCK.

MATHEMATICAL CLASS BOOKS

FOR

COLLEGES AND SCHOOLS.

- PROFESSOR BOOLE'S TREATISE ON DIFFERENTIAL EQUATIONS. [Nearly ready.]
- MR. COOPER'S GEOMETRICAL CONIC SECTIONS. [In the Press.]
- MR. DREW'S GEOMETRICAL CONIC SECTIONS. [Immediately.]
- MR. FROST'S NEWTON, SECTIONS I. II. III. With Notes and Problems. 10s. 6d.
- MR. GODFRAY'S TREATISE ON THE LUNAR THEORY. 5s. 6d.
- MR. GRANT'S PLANE ASTRONOMY. 6s.
- MR. HEMMING'S DIFFERENTIAL AND INTEGRAL CALCULUS. Second Edition. 9s.
- MR. PARKINSON'S ELEMENTARY MECHANICS. 9s. 6d.
- MR. PARKINSON'S ELEMENTARY TREATISE ON OPTICS. [Preparing.]
- MR. PEARSON'S TREATISE ON FINITE DIFFERENCES. Second Edition. 5s.
- MR. PHEAR'S ELEMENTARY HYDROSTATICS. 5s. 6d.
- MR. PHEAR'S ELEMENTARY MECHANICS. 10s. 6d.
- MR. PUCKLE'S ELEMENTARY CONIC SECTIONS. Second Edition. 7s. 6d.
- MR. BARNARD SMITH'S ARITHMETIC AND ALGEBRA. Fourth Edition. 10s. 6d.
- MR. BARNARD SMITH'S ARITHMETIC FOR SCHOOLS. Fifth Thousand. 4s. 6d.
- MR. BARNARD SMITH'S KEY TO THE ABOVE. 8s. 6d.
- MR. BARNARD SMITH'S MECHANICS AND HYDROSTATICS. [Preparing.]
- MR. SNOWBALL'S PLANE AND SPHERICAL TRIGONOMETRY. Eighth Edition. 7s. 6d.
- MR. SNOWBALL'S INTRODUCTION TO PLANE TRIGONOMETRY. Second Edition. 5s.
- MR. SNOWBALL'S CAMBRIDGE COURSE OF NATURAL PHILOSOPHY. Fourth Edition. 5s.
- PROF. TAIT'S AND MR. STEELE'S TREATISE ON DYNAMICS. 10s. 6d.
- MR. TODHUNTER'S TREATISE ON DIFFERENTIAL AND ELEMENTS OF INTEGRAL CALCULUS. Second Edition. 10s. 6d.
- MR. TODHUNTER'S TREATISE ON INTEGRAL CALCULUS AND ITS APPLICATIONS. [Just ready.] 10s. 6d.

MATHEMATICAL CLASS BOOKS—continued.

MR. TODHUNTER'S ANALYTICAL STATICS.	10s. 6d.
MR. TODHUNTER'S CONIC SECTIONS.	10s. 6d.
MR. TODHUNTER'S TREATISE ON ALGEBRA.	[Preparing.]
MR. TODHUNTER'S ALGEBRA FOR BEGINNERS.	[Preparing.]
PROF. WILSON'S TREATISE ON DYNAMICS.	9s. 6d.
CAMBRIDGE SENATE-HOUSE PROBLEMS, 1848 TO 1851. With Solutions by Messrs. FERRERS and JACKSON.	15s. 6d.
CAMBRIDGE SENATE-HOUSE RIDERS, 1848 TO 1851. With Solutions by Mr. JAMESON.	7s. 6d.
CAMBRIDGE SENATE-HOUSE PROBLEMS, AND RIDERS FOR 1857. With Solutions by the Moderators and Examiners.	[Nearly ready.]
CAMBRIDGE SENATE-HOUSE PROBLEMS AND RIDERS. 1854. With Solutions by the Moderators, Messrs. WALTON & MACKENZIE.	10s. 6d.

GREEK AND LATIN CLASS BOOKS.

MR. DRAKE'S EUMENIDES OF ÆSCHYLUS. With English Notes.	7s. 6d.
MR. DRAKE'S DEMOSTHENES DE CORONA. With English Notes.	5s.
MR. FROST'S THUCYDIDES, BOOK VI. With English Notes.	7s. 6d.
DR. HUMPHREYS' EXERCITATIONES IAMBICÆ. Second Edition.	5s. 6d.
MR. MAYOR'S JUVENAL. With English Notes.	10s. 6d.
MR. MERIVALE'S SALLUST. With English Notes.	5s.
MR. THRING'S CONSTRUING BOOK.	2s. 6d.
MR. WRIGHT'S HELLENICA. With English Notes.	3s. 6d.
MR. WRIGHT'S HELP TO LATIN GRAMMAR.	4s. 6d.
MR. WRIGHT'S THE SEVEN KINGS OF ROME; A FIRST LATIN CONSTRUING BOOK. With English Notes.	3s.
MR. WRIGHT'S VOCABULARY AND EXERCISES FOR THE ABOVE.	[Just ready. 2s. 6d.]

ENGLISH GRAMMARS.

MR. THRING'S ELEMENTS OF GRAMMAR.	New Edition. 2s.
MR. THRING'S CHILD'S GRAMMAR.	New Edition. 1s.
MR. PARMINTER'S MATERIALS FOR ENGLISH GRAMMAR.	3s. 6d.

LATELY PUBLISHED.

MR. SWAINSON'S HANDBOOK TO BUTLER'S ANALOGY.	2s.
MR. CROSSE'S ANALYSIS OF PALEY'S EVIDENCES.	3s. 6d.
MR. SIMPSON'S EPITOME OF CHURCH HISTORY. New Edition.	5s.

~~YORK UNIVERSITY LAW LIBRARY~~

